SUBMARINE SINKS U. S. SHIP

SAY EASTLAND WAS OVERLOADED

CHARGES CRIME IN CHICAGO HORROR

By International News Service.

CHICAGO, July 26.—"The Eastland was overloading, and the overloading was responsible for the tragedy of Saturday."

This was the finding of States Attorney MacLay Hoyne today, made after examining more than 100 witnesses. Announcement of the finding was made by Edwin J. Rader, assistant statesattorney, who was preparing the testimony for presentation to the Grand Judy. Criminal prosecution will follow.

As the investigation progressed, headed by officials of the city, State and federal governments, divers, firemen and policemen continued their sorry task of removing bodies from the sunken hill of the death ship. It was believed that between 1,000 and 1,200 persons lost their lives.

Coroner Hoffman declared, however, that with more than 500 dead already accounted for, there were, he thought, still 700 bodies trapped in the hull and caught in the life nets stretched across the Chicago River at frequent intervals for a distance of nearly two miles.

Acting Mayor Moorehouse today gave out the following statement:

"In 1914 the captain of the Eastland filed papers with the Chicago chief of police swearing that the capacity of the vessel was 2,000 persons. The company admitted that 2,500 were on board when she capsized Saturday. That seems to be overcrowding on the face of it."

MORE THAN 100 WITNESSES.

Assistant State's Attorney Rader, discussing the results of the investigation, said:

"All our testimony points to the fact that the boat was overloaded. There are other considerations, but the main fact is that overloading caused the tragedy.

They had too many persons, too high on the ship. The question of ballast has been brought up, but that is of secondary importance. We have been investigating since early Saturday morning. We have questioned more than 100 witnesses. Everything points to overloading, and the State's Attorney's office is prepared to charge this.

"There were other violations and irregularities. Some of the inside facts as to the working of the government inspectors will be revealed in our completer sport on the catastrophe.

"We found that the gangways were not closed. This would have helped stop the inrush of the water. The lower portholes were not closed either, as they should have been. But all these are f minor importance

MYSTERY SHIP SENDS S. O. S. SIGNAL

By International News Service.

NEW YORK, July 26.—Steamships off the North Atlantic coast have been notified by wireless to watch for and aid another vessel from which S. O. S. signals were received at the Fire Island radio station shortly before 10 o'clock last night.

All of the coast stations have been relaying the distress signal from the Navy Yard here.

The fact that the signals received are faint give assurances of their genuineness.

At 2 o'clock the wireless operator at the Brooklyn Navy Yard reported that he had tried in vain to get in touch with the distressed ship. Nothing has been heard from it at any of the wireless stations along the coast.

Later reports from the U. S. wireless station on Fire Island stated that the S. O. S. call was broken off before the vessel could give her name or exact location, the apparatus evidently becoming disabled.

It was plain, however, that she was within 200 miles of the shore. The station continued to call back for nearly three-quarters of an hour, but with no result. Word was sent at once however, to the Navy Yard and a radio flashed to all vessels at sea within range.

There was a possibility, it was suggested, that the message came from a ship carrying munitions which had been damaged by bombs.

EATON SCORES IN DIVORCE CONTEST

Charles S. Eaton, owner of Thompson's Spa, scored a preliminary victory today in his suit for divorce against his second wife, Mrs. Ella F. Bartlett Eaton, in the overruling by Judge McLaughlin of the motion made by Mrs. Eaton's counsel to have portions of Eaton's answers to Mrs. Eaton's interrogatories struck out.

Attorney Charles F. Choate, Jr., senior counsel for Mrs. Eaton, argued, before Judge McLaughlin, that answers to interrogatories filed by Attorney Sherman L. Whipple, counsel for Mr. Eaton, were argumentative and should be removed from the records.

Judge McLaughlin refused to interfere with the sensational allegations made by Eaton against his young wife, who is living in their marble palace at Pasadena, which Eaton claims, his wife forced him against his wishes and judgment to build and furnish at a cost of $170,000.

GERMANS TAKE 2 FORTS NEAR WARSAW

BERLIN, July 26—(By Wireless)—Pultusk and Rozan, two of Russia's strongest fortresses on the Narew River, have been captured by the Germans, it was officially announced today. These strongholds protected Warsaw from the northeast and their fall is expected to facilitate the campaign against the Polish capital. Saturday's official announcement stated that both fortresses had been stormed, but it was not until today that their actual capture became known.

By FRANCIS LAVELLE MURRAY, Special Correspondent of the International News Service.

PETROGRAD, July 26.—Successful sorties by the garrison of Novo Georgievsk have resulted in the regaining of ground taken by the Germans northeast of that fortress, the War Office announced today.

The operations of the Russians in this district are said to threaten with disaster the troops of Field Marshal von Hindenburg, who crossed the Narew River.

The War Office announcement brought the first hope that the German drive against Warsaw from the North would result in failure. The Petrograd military critics pointed out that the conditions in the Warsaw campaign are now strikingly like those of the German campaign against Paris. In the latter the Germans crossed the Aisne, but were rolled back from the prepared French positions on the Marne.

In their drive against Warsaw the Germans have crossed the Narew and plunged forward toward the Bug. Their success would be assured could Field Marshal von Mackensen have broken the Lublin-Cholm line, but latest reports from the front indicate that not only has Von Mackensen been repulsed, but the Russians have also taken the offensive with good effect.

German artillery is incessantly bombarding the outer works of Ivangorod. The Russian guns are responding effectively.

CHAIR READY FOR BECKER

PUT DEATH GUARD ON BECKER

NEW YORK, July 26.—Preparations for the execution of Charles Becker at Sing Sing on Wednesday morning are being amde today, regardless of the final fight for his life in Justice Ford's Court. The death chair will be tested tomorrow and all other preliminaries will continue unless the court proceedings result in a postponement of the electrocution or a stay.

Becker is reported hopeful, despite the fact he may have only today and tomorrow to live. He helped his lawyers put the finishing touches on the case to be presented to Justice Ford, and had a long talk with Mrs. Elicker Jackson Becker, a brother of the condemned man, after a visit to the death house said:

"Charlie refuses to believe he is going to be put to death. He still feels something will happen at the last minute to establish his innocence in the Rosenthal slaying. He won't believe all hope is over for him to the very last, not till the keepers come for him on the last morning. He is lighthearted and cheerful, and his confidence is amazing."

MAKE BECKER READY.

Preparing Becker for the chair began today about the time his lawyers appeared before Judge Ford. He was led from the death house for his last bath. His "death suit" has been completed and will be given to him tonight or early tomorrow, unless he is given a reprieve or a stay in the meantime. He will be shaved and his hair will be clipped, so the hair electrodes can better be fitted.

While he is in the bathroom his cell will be cleaned out. All the small comforts he has been allowed to keep will be removed, even his fountain pen, his writing paper and his tin cup. The bedclothing, cot and mattress he has been using will be taken from him. His cell will be searched from top to bottom, swept and scrubbed.

When he returns he will find everything new. The suit of black, loosely made in prison, will be ready. There also will be a white shirt, a black tie and a pair of felt slippers. The slitting of the right rouser leg will be left for the last.

UNDER EXTRA GUARD.

Today an extra guard took his stand beside the door of Becker's cell. The condemned man's food from now on will be cut up for him before it enters his cell, and he must eat it with a spoon.

Tuesday night Father Curry, Becker's spiritual adviser, and Father Cashion, the prison chaplain, will visit him, and again on Wednesday morning several hours before the time set for Becker's death, which is 5:45 a. m. As Samuel Haines, a negro, has is to go to the chair that morning, Deputy Warden Johnson plans to send Becker after Haines.

Becker will make his last confession then to Father Curry, and will receive the last sacraments of the church, extreme notion, which will be administered in the presence of Father Cashin.

Then the two priests will recite the prayer for the dying. Twenty minutes before Becker is led is a guard will slit his trousers leg, and he will march to the deathe hamber with a guard shackled to each hand and another walking behind.

Although Becker presumably has

'Toodles,' Ship's Mascot, Saved By Leap in Sea

When the Rose and Margaret arrived at the Fish Pier today, Captain Valentine O'Neil told a thrilling story of how Joseph Wayland, of the crew, risked his life to save the black cat "Toodles," ship's mascot, from drowning.

When off La Have Bank a wave washed the cat overboard. The crew were in consternation at the thought of losing their luck. Wayland dove to the rescue. It was more than half an hour before the boat could brought about to pick them up.

Mrs. Carman Is to Appear in Films

NEW YORK, July 26.—Mrs. Florence Carman, acquitted of the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey at Freeport, Long Island, is to appear in motion pictures in New York. The pictures show her receiving friends at her home after the second trial. She declares that posing for the "movies" was the only way to satisfy a mortgage of $10,000 on her home. The offer made to her for appearing in the films is said to be $250,000.

LEELANAW BLOWN UP BY SUBMARINE; CREW ARE SAVED

By International News Service.

LONDON, July 26.—Within forty-eight hours after the German Foreign Office had received President Wilson's latest note on submarine warfare, a German submarine torpedoed and sank the American steamer Leelanaw off the coast of Scotland. Her crew was landed at Kirkwall, Scotland, today.

The Leelanaw was torpedoed on Sunday morning while bound from Archangel, Russia, to Belfast, Ireland, with a cargo of flax. Before she went to the bottom the crew took to the boats under the direction of Captain Delk.

The identity of the submarine that sank the Leelanaw has not yet been ascertained.

Reports from Kirkwall say that the Leelanaw was approached Sunday morning by the German submarine off the northwest coast of Scotland. The submarine ordered the ship to stop, and the commander then put a crew aboard.

The commander inquired after the Leelanaw's cargo, and on be told it was flax, immediately declared it contraband and then ordered the entire crew to the boats. After they put off from the ship she was torpedoed and went to the bottom.

The Leelanaw, a vessel of 1,924 tons, owned by the Leelinaw Steamship Company, sailed from Galveston on May 5 under command of Captain Dalk for New York. It arrived at New York on May 14 and sailed three days later for Kirkwall. Thence it proceeded on June 28 for Archangel. From Archangel the Leelanaw sailed for Belfast.

The Leelanaw carried a crew of forty-two men. She was built in 1888 by Palmers Company, limited, Newcastle, England. Her length was 250½ feet. She had a depth of 18 feet and was 32 feet wide. She was a steel screw steamer and was equipped with wireless.

WATCHFUL WAITING NOW DECLARED TO BE THE GERMAN POLICY

By FREDERICK WERNER.
Staff Correspondent of the International News Service.

BERLIN, July 26.—"Watchful waiting" is now the policy of the German government in its negotiations with the United States regarding submarine warfare and the protection of citizens of neutral nations at sea.

It is accepted as a positive fact that President Wilson will address a note to England respecting the rights of Americans, and the German Foreign Office is anxious to ascertain the tone of this communication before making any reply to the latest American note.

German newspapers, in commenting upon the American protest, express dissatisfaction and many of them advise the German government to pursue its present policy of warfare irrespective of any demands for modification which might come from across the Atlantic.

"Germany must continue submarining," says the Deutsche Tageszeitung. "We have only one answer to make to President Wilson, and that is 'No'," says Die Post.

Captain Persius, famous German naval critic, in writing in the Tageblatt, warns the government that the American note might be filled with dangers and advises the Foreign Office to take no hasty step that might be regretted afterwards.

"CANNOT COMPLY."

"It is to be hoped that America will be reasonable and not insist upon Germany giving up her present methods of warfare," says Captain Persius. "Germany cannot comply with any such request.

The Morgen Post says: "The court, sous tone of the American note should not deceive any one as to the seriousness of the contents."

The Tageblecha, Rundschau: "The note is devoid of logic. President Wilson always sounds ominous and consequences. He doesn't complain of the chief author of his troubles, although his countrymen have pointed out to him hundreds of thousands of times who it really is that is violating the international laws."

The Berliner Post: The words 'unfriendly act' used in the American note, make it impossible to attempt to reach any final agreement."

The Reichsbote: "We now understand why Mr. Bryan declined any longer to represent the principles of the American government."

Count von Reventlow, another German naval critic, declares that the note breathes the most hateful disregard for Germany's point of view."

"NO LONGER NEUTRAL."

The Vossische Zeitung says that courteous proposals have not been able to change the President's obstinacy and that from a standpoint he not only rejects all proposals, but clothes the rejection in a form that is anything but friendly.

"Whoever plans such a thing," the paper continues, "is no longer neutral, but takes sides against Germany and for its enemies."

The Kreuz Zeitung says:

"We resist the thought that the United States in its position on the submarine matter aims at the indirect support of England. But we must confess that the contents of the note are with difficulty understandable to us from any other viewpoint."

Herewith are varying opinions on the latest United States note to Germany, as expressed to the Boston AMERICAN by members of Congress, leading publicists, educators and others.

DR. EDMUND VON MACH, Westbrook, Me., German publicist, author of the celebrated book, "What Germany Wants":

Pierpont Morgan and the other backers of the allies are facing financial ruin unless President Wilson can either free England of the German submarine danger or remove the United States from the list of neutral states. While the submarine warfare lasts the allies dare not ship gold to America, and while we are nominally neutral the reserve banks cannot further discount the English bills. Hundreds of millions are at stake, and to protect them President Wilson is pushing the American people to the brink of war. The submarines have introduced a new weapon for which no law exists. The German use of the submarine is unsatisfactory, a case of neutral states should draw up new rules. The United States has as little right as Germany to force its interpretation on the world. In one sensible,

PRINCE IN AUTO CRASH NEAR LENOX

LENOX, July 26.—Prince Alfred Zu Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst of Vienna, who is summering in Lenox, is being congratulated on his lucky escape from injury when an automobile he was driving plunged down a ten-foot embankment into a barbed wire fence.

The accident occurred in Cheshire, fifteen miles north of here. The Prince was traveling alone and was hurled out over the driving wheel, but was uninjured.

The Prince, who is an attache of the Austro-Hungarian embassy, was returning from northern Berkshire when in attempting to turn out for another automobile he lost control of his car. The barbed wire gouged out a swath an inch deep on the radiator and prevented the automobile from going further down the embankment.

Conservatory of Music Graduate Given a Divorce

Bostonians who remember Louise Minor, a Conservatory of Music graduate, and her marriage in 1906 to Dr. Grinwold Townsend Bragaw, were interested today in dispatches from Denver telling of her divorce.

She secured the decree on the ground of "mental cruelty." She is of an old New England family. Dr. Bragaw, an Episcopalian minister, is a son of E. T. Bragaw, a retired New York millionaire.

Dr. and Mrs. Bragaw have lived in Denver for seven years. She is still there. He is supposed to be in Torrington, Conn.

"In December, 1911," Mrs. Bragaw charged, "Dr. Bragaw was frequenting restaurants and wine rooms in Denver in the company of other women.

"For the last five years he borrowed money in various sums from divers persons and neglected and refused to pay the same. He owes money to persons in Dickinson, N. D.; Billings, Montana and Denver.

$170,000,000 IS TRADE GAIN IN BOSTON

Boston's foreign commerce shows a gain of 103 per cent., or $170,000,000, between 1902 and 1914, according to a letter from Chairman Edward F. McSweeney of the Port Directors to the United States engineer's office.

Chairman McSweeney's letter is a review of the development of the port during the completion of the thirty-five foot channel. He says in part:

"In 1902, when the thirty-five foot channel project was adopted, the foreign commerce of the port of Boston was $164,795,905. In 1914 it had grown to $334,976,978, a gain in twelve years of $170,178,073, or 103 per cent.

"For the same period, the foreign commerce of the United States had grown from $2,330,092,803 to $3,893,-986,051, a gain of $1,572,897,248, or 67 per cent. in twelve years as against Boston's gain of 103 per cent.

"In 1902 there were 10,414 vessels arriving at Boston in the foreign and coastwise trade. In 1914 this had grown to 11,468, a gain of 1,054, or 10.1 per cent. in twelve years, a little less than 1 per cent. a year. This comparatively smaller growth in the number of vessels is but natural, the real growth of shipping being shown in the increase of tonnage.

WOULD REFORM METHODS OF MILK SALE

"Grade New England milk. Standardize the product, so that the buyer may be sure he is getting what he asks for, and so that the seller may command a price according to the quality of his product.

"Systematize by common sense efficiency methods the production, transportation, and marketing of the product, to the end that the business of producing and selling milk may be placed on a sound business basis to the benefit of every department of the industry and of the community as a whole."

These, in brief, are the recommendations of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, in its report on the milk industry of New England, issued today.

FIRST-CLASS PRODUCT.

The prime essential emphasized in the report is the securing of a first-class product—and not only from the viewpoint of public health, but also from that of commercial value and profit to the producer, distributor and consumer.

Six suggestions are made:

First, The establishment of a standardized system of milk grading and labeling for all New England.

Second, The establishment of country milk stations by producers in co-operation with local business men and railroads, where milk may be graded and processed and the surplus utilized in the manufacture of butter and cheese.

Third, Bookkeeping by farmers for keeping accurate records of production costs and economizing farm operations. A co-operative arrangement is suggested.

Fourth, Reform of present methods of railroad transportation, abolishing the leased car system and establishing a uniform per-can rate.

ADVERTISE VALUE.

Fifth, Improvement of city distribution. Adoption of the ticket system, cost accounting methods, and the study of common problems by dealers in a co-operative organization.

Sixth, Advertisement of the food value of milk and milk products, thus adding to the other improvements in marketing the important factor of publicity.

"Were the suggested recommendations carried out," says the report, "there is reason to hope for a substantial increase in prosperity among New England farmers and dealers, and for securing a good, clean, fresh product of milk, cream and butter, at reasonable prices."

WOMEN FAINT IN CHICAGO MORGUE

compared to the big fact that the ship carried more passengers than she should have."

OFFICERS ACCUSED.

Investigation of the Eastland disaster has already revealed a startling story of the conduct of life officers on board the ill-fated steamboat. Fireman James O'Dowd told the following story:

"Five minutes before the Eastland went over I saw the danger. I sent my assistant and then went up myself to tell Captain Pederson that the boat seemed about to capsize. He told us 'Mind your own business and get back to the boiler room.' Then it happened."

Assistant Engineer Snow said:

"When she began to list I sent up a danger signal. No one paid the slightest attention to it. When the gauge showed she had reached the danger point I signalled repeatedly. No one paid any attention to these signals."

State's Attorney Hoyne declared that much of the responsibility for the disaster rested with the United States inspection service. The records of the inspection bureau show that the Federal officials were warned that the Eastland was unseaworthy a year ago, and that, so far as Hoyne can find out, no heed was paid to the warning.

The State's attorney also said he had learned that the life preservers on the Eastland contained granulated cork instead of whole pieces of cork, as required by marine law.

REFUSE USE OF DYNAMITE.

Permission to dynamite the sunken hull of the Eastland was asked today and refused by Coroner Hoffman, whose authority in directing the work of rescue exceeds even the federal officials working under the orders of President Wilson.

William Ayers, chief of the bridge repair department of the city of Chicago, asked that his men be allowed to use explosives to blast out the imprisoned bodies which are tangled in the ship's hull.

"Under no circumstances use explosives," commanded the coroner. "Dynamite would destroy evidence which we hope to get when the boat is righted. Rather a few hours' or days' delay in recovering the bodies of the dead than the destruction of any bit of evidence that might assist in placing the responsibility for this crime."

THREE FORCES TO UNITE IN INVESTIGATION

By International News Service.

CHICAGO, July 26.—Federal, State and city forces working separately on the evidence, will unite the results of their efforts to fix the blame of the Eastland disaster.

Coroner Peter Hoffman was at his office here at 8 a. m. He arranged to hold a conference with Acting Mayor Moorehouse, Chief of Police Healy and First Deputy Schintzler. It was decided at this conference that all the evidence gathered by the city authorities and the coroner's deputies and detectives was to be turned over to the Federal authorities and that no action would be depended upon from the Federal grand jury.

The Federal inquisitors were ordered to report to Judge Landis on Thursday morning. At that time a division of the work will be made, so that the best results can be obtained through the men working directly under orders from President Wilson and those being directed by the local Federal authorities.

Dispatches from Washington say that Acting Secretary of Commerce Sweet will recommend to Secretary Redfield, now in Syracuse, that an impartial board of naval experts and civilians be named to conduct an inquiry into the causes of the Eastland disaster. A copy of the telegram also was to be sent to President Wilson at Cornish.

Mr. Sweet said that to avoid any suspicion or charge of impartiality he favored an investigating board outside of the department of commerce.

The United States authorities began gathering evidence to present to a special Federal Grand Jury called by Federal Judge Landis.

Officials of the steamboat inspection service of the Department of Commerce arrived in Chicago over night, and went to work early on their investigation.

Mayor William Hale Thompson is hurrying back to Chicago from San Francisco to take charge of the city's part in the investigation and the relief work. He is due to reach home at 9:30 a. m. Wednesday.

Policemen and the city official photographers were ordered to bring every scrap of evidence to the State Attorney's office in stories of survivors and other witnesses, photographs and sketches.

Forty-four officers and members of the crew of the death ship were held up today pending developments of the inquiries. Those in custody include Captain Pederson, the first and second mates.

STEELE IN A CELL.

W. C. Steele, secretary-treasurer of the Indiana Transportation Company, lessees of the Eastland, is held by the police. He was placed in a cell late Saturday night and since that time has not been allowed to communicate with anybody. Not even application for bail has been made.

This is the first time that an officer of a public service corporation has ever been held in a cell in Chicago on account of a disaster in which there was a hint of criminal negligence.

DETECTIVES COVER CITY.

Half a hundred detectives are searching for George Munger, purser of the Eastland, who disappeared following the accident. Munger's son arrived here from Kalamazoo, Mich., and said that he had received a telegram from his father that he was safe.

More than 40 witnesses, members of the crew and eye-witnesses of the tragedy, already have been examined at the State's attorney's office. Stenographers have taken 1,000 pages of testimony.

Early today a force of 50 detectives set out to cover sailors' boarding houses in an effort to round up all the members of the Eastland's crew from them the authorities hope to obtain important facts as to the condition of the steamer.

CORONER BELIEVES 700 BODIES ARE STILL TO BE RECOVERED

By International News Service.

CHICAGO, July 26.—Under the glare of more than a 100-electric searlights the grewsome work of removing bodies from the overturned hull of the Eastland went on throughout the night. Crews of divers worked in relays, searching under the side of the boat, while police, firemen and coroner's deputies waited in boats to relieve the underwater workers of their burdens and convey the dead to the Second Regiment Armory, identification is proceeding rapidly.

All through the night there was a solemn procession of seekers after relatives and friends filing through the silent halls of the huge building, peering into the upturned faces of the dead. A hysterical laugh, a scream or a thud as some man or woman fell in a faint announced that another of the bodies had been identified.

At his office this morning Coroner Hoffman made the following statement to a representative of the International News Service:

"I am positive that there are at least 700 bodies on the Eastland and in the river. We are making every effort to have those brought up. We expect the lifting of the Eastland to begin some time today, or at the latest early tomorrow. Machinery for this purpose is being landed here from the East. It is estimated the work will require three days.

"We all feel the indignation that rules the city, and every man in the investigation is determined that no one shall be spared when the time for punishment comes."

CAPTAIN PEDERSON IN CELL.

Captain Healy of the police took charge of the work on the sunken hull of the Eastland at daylight.

Captain Harry Pederson of the Eastland was held as the Hudson avenue police station. With him in cells were eleven members of his crew. Others of the crew and some officials of the boats line were held in other police stations in different parts of the city.

W. C. Steele, secretary-treasurer of the Indiana Transportation Company, that had leased the boat for the day, was in a cell at the Thirty-ninth street police station.

He was allowed to communicate with no one. He was placed in a cell late Saturday night and up to this morning there had been no attempt to obtain bail for him.

DIVERS WORK THROUGH NIGHT.

When the day dawned a chilly Summer day without sun, a fresh crew of searchers took up the task of removing bodies from the submerged lower decks and the hold of the vessel. Nearly a score of workers fainted from exhaustion and the strain of seeing and handling one horrible find after another.

Divers from other lake ports arrived in Chicago last night and more reported that they were on their way today to help in the work of recovering bodies. Eight Chicago divers worked from Saturday morning until last night without intermission. Several of the men were prostrated today as the result of their labors.

Until the hull is raised and the Chicago River has been dragged its full length for bodies that have floated away from the scene of the disaster, the total death list will not be known.

CITY RAISING RELIEF.

Several bodies caught by the strong current and swept away from the wreck were discovered in the net stretched across the river at Twelfth street nearly two miles from the scene of the overturned lake steamer. The bodies were removed to the Second Regiment Armory.

Jews have been suspended from all the bridges in the river below the steamer, and these were known to contain scores of bodies. An electric flash on each bridge shows every time an object strikes these nets. Bridge tenders today declared that these flashes have flashed scores of times.

The body of a young girl was taken from the river a few minutes after 10 a. m. at the Wells street bridge, two blocks from the scene of Saturday's disaster.

While the work of recovering bodies was continuing, city authorities were extending their best efforts for raising an enormous relief fund. Aided by the newspapers a fund of nearly $300,000 has been secured, with the prospects of the total exceeding $1,000,000 before all the bodies of the victims were buried.

A committee of nearly 100 citizens, working under the direction of Acting Mayor Moorehouse, was in charge of the work of raising the funds. Subscriptions of $1,000 each were announced by the owners of three morning papers to start the fund. A cablegram received from Sir Thomas Lipton, pledging another $1,000, was received today.

LATEST FIGURES IN DISASTER.

From official statement issued at Armory:

Number of dead	1,099 to 1,200
Identified victims	802
Missing and fate unknown	462

From statement issued by Coroner:

Bodies still unrecovered	700

U. S. INSPECTORS BLAMED BY THE STATE'S ATTORNEY

By International News Service.

CHICAGO, July 26.—State's Attorney Maclay Hoyne, in a sensational statement, says:

"We insist that a considerable portion of the blame for the Eastland disaster rests upon the United States Inspection bureau.

"If the inspectors of the bureau had done their duty, the accident would not have happened.

"We know the ship was considered unsafe by them, because there are letters on file in Washington which predicted Saturday's occurrence. I have copies of these letters."

Chief of Police Healey today said:

"The turning over of the Eastland was due to criminal negligence."

That the investigation will show bad seamanship was largely responsible for the city's greatest tragedy is the opinion of many lake men. It is hard, they say, to explain Captain Harry Pederson's statement that the Eastland took on her water ballast until out in the lake, in view of the statements of naval architects and former officers of the steamship that she was of top heavy and safe only when heavily ballasted.

STATEMENTS IN CONFLICT.

The conflicting statements of the captain, who said he had not ordered the ballast pumps started, and of men in the engine room, who said the steamer was taking ballast when she upset, apparently show disobedience of orders.

Whatever further inquiry may reveal as to the number of passengers permitted aboard the Eastland, the number which might legally have been taken on and the unseaworthiness or crankiness of the craft, all who have heard the stories of witnesses told over the week agree that the immediate cause of the overturning of the boat was too-cold water ballast and allowing an enormous weight of passengers on the upper decks.

Officials of the Department of Commerce at Washington furnish evidence of the lengths to which the owners of the Eastland were willing to go to carry the maximum of passengers with a minimum of life-saving equipment.

Secretary of Commerce Redfield has made public some of the correspondence he had last summer with W. H. Hull, general manager of the St. Joseph-Chicago Steamship Company, in which Hull practically asked permission to violate the United States laws on overcrowding vessels.

All this correspondence will be placed before the various investigating bodies, for the determination of everywhere heard to get at the persons responsible, no matter who they are.

WARNED TWO YEARS AGO.

One of the most important witnesses in the various investigations will be John Devereux York, prominent naval architect, who has delivered to State's Attorney Hoyne a copy of a letter he wrote in August, 1913, to the United States Harbor Inspector in Chicago, directing the latter's attention to the fact that the steamer Eastland, in York's opinion, was unseaworthy and should not be permitted to operate.

York asked a three-cornered investigation of the Eastland—a hull, a life-saving and boiler inspection. He said the boat had a 35-foot beam and should have been provided with a single keel, but that no such provision had been made.

He also states that the vessel had listed on occasion when it was carrying only a fraction of the crowd that was on board when she turned over.

BASEBALL PARKS CLOSED SUNDAY AS RESULT OF HORROR

By International News Service.

CHICAGO, July 26.—While baseball doors swung wide and cabaret shows and moving picture performances were playing to capacity crowds throughout yesterday, the only amusement places closed as a tribute to the Eastland's dead were the Chicago White Sox and the Chicago Federal League baseball parks.

A double-header has been billed at each park, but President Comiskey of the American League and President Weghman of the Whales ordered that the gates of the ball parks be kept locked.

Thousands of fans who had not heard of the decision of the magnates flocked to both parks, many of them turning away disgusted that their afternoon's pleasure had been spoiled.

$1,000,000 ASKED FOR RELIEF WORK

By International News Service.

CHICAGO, July 26.—One million dollars has been asked by Acting Mayor William R. Moorhouse and the Chicago Examiner for relief of the needy, but it is intended to raise the money in each district and not ask for any outside aid. At a meeting of business men more than $200,000 was raised and another $100,000 was pledged.

Officials of the Western Electric Company announced that $100,000 of the company's emergency fund or $5,000,000 was available instantly.

An appeal was issued over the signature of Acting Mayor Moorhouse, calling upon the people of Chicago to raise $200,000 in dimes and dollars within forty-eight hours, and a total of $500,000 is wanted by Tuesday night.

The subscription list of the Chicago Examiner was opened with a contribution of $1,000 by William Randolph Hearst and other subscriptions came in all day.

The Examiner is planning to swell its benefit fund by a number of theatrical performances, baseball games and other athletic events, as well as donations of the receipts of matinee performances and motion picture houses.

"This is no disaster," the appeal reads, "thousands of miles away like those of the Titanic, Lusitania or Slocum. No less terrible in its toll of lives than these, the Eastland disaster was in the heart of our city."

The acting Mayor named a committee to raise funds, and scores of clubs, lodges and civic societies began work at once. President H. B. Thayer of the Western Electric Company, who came here today from New York, took charge of the work. Earnest P. Bicknell, national director of the Red Cross, is also here supervising relief organization work.

FEDERAL INSPECTION BOARD IS BLAMED FOR THE TRAGEDY

WASHINGTON, July 26.—Colonel John Hannan, secretary to Senator La Follette and an expert on safety at sea, has signed a statement charging that the United States board of supervising inspectors of steam vessels was responsible for the Eastland disaster.

"The Chicago tragedy," said Colonel Hannan, "is directly attributable to the looseness of our inspection laws and to the lax regulations provided for the steamboat inspection service for the control of passenger steamers, especially those in the excursion business. Enough facts are known with respect to the Eastland to warrant a condemnation of the board of supervising inspectors and the direction of a thorough inquiry of that body.

"The Eastland was recently rebuilt. Under its new passenger certificate it was entitled to carry 2,500 passengers from May 15 to October 15, provided the boat did not go more than five miles from shore. In the 1912 list of steamers the Eastland was certificated to carry 247 passengers. This is the number which the inspectors certified it was fit to carry at all seasons of the year.

VARYING CAPACITY.

"At the same time they issued a certificate to this boat permitting it to carry from May 15 to October 15, 625 passengers and increasing this number to 2,000 within that limit of time and conditioned upon the boat not going more than five miles from shore.

"In the rule which permits so much elasticity in the certificates of a vessel lies the cause of the Chicago tragedy. The Eastland was overloaded. The tragedy was the result of this overloading. It was the direct result of the policy of gambling with human lives to make dollars. It was not an accident.

"The steamboat managers want a license to carry an excessive number of passengers so that they may pile up profits. The law clothes the board of supervising inspectors with power to make the rules and to limit the number of passengers. The steamboat owners bring pressure to bear upon the inspectors to the end that the door is opened wide and these steamers permitted to crowd their decks with passengers and to equip their boats with a minimum of life-saving devices.

"That there have not been numbers of similar disasters must be attributed to good luck and the protection of Providence rather than to any protection furnished by the United States inspection service or by any regard of their obligation to the public on the part of the vessel owners.

INSPECTORS WARNED.

"The inspection service cannot claim that it has not been warned. Victor Olander has frequently been before the supervising inspector general and the committees of Congress representing the Lake Seamen's Union and called attention to the danger of overloading. He especially directed attention to the danger of crowds of pleasure seekers on excursion boats on the Eastland going to sea, and an expert on safety at sea, has signed a statement charging that the United States board of supervising inspectors of steam vessels was responsible for the Eastland disaster.

"He pointed out that they were liable to capsize, and in such an event that hundreds of lives would be lost. He has not only pleaded with the department to have the rules changed with respect to lake steamers, but he pointed out in many ways the laxity of the inspection service upon the Great Lakes. Presumably because he has represented the interests of the men employed upon vessels, his pleas were discounted and his warnings unheeded.

"The Eastland tragedy vindicates Olander, but where does it leave the inspection service?

"To obtain an understanding of the rule under which the department permits these excursion steamers to load, all that is necessary is to measure a space three feet square on your floor. That space representing nine square feet is a little in excess of the space allowed each passenger on the deck of the Eastland or any other of these excursion steamers loaded up to the limit of their inspection certificate during the excursion season.

DECKS CROWDED.

"It must be remembered that this nine square feet includes the space upon the decks used as promenades and also all the floor space in the staterooms, dining and other saloons, the cabins, in fact all the floor space which the passenger occupy or may occupy. Besides the passengers there is the furniture, the chairs, lounging benches and tables, all of the operating paraphernalia which is on deck.

"When all of the stateroom and saloon and cabin floor space is subtracted from the total it will reduce the promenade deck space to a mere fraction of this nine square feet and the crowding upon the upper decks can readily be understood. To add your comprison of this take a string 12 feet long and place it in a square on the floor. You will readily see how little space is allowed each passenger.

"An inspection service that will issue and defend certificates such as was held by the Eastland has no conception of its duty to the public.

"In making new certificates the service has bowed to the wishes of the shipowners.

"The service has permitted the doing of the things which were primarily responsible for the Chicago tragedy. The service never has and never will be able to convince the public that a ship which on May 15 is going not more than five miles from shore, would be permitted to carry only 147 passengers, should be permitted to carry on the same route on the same day following 2,000 passengers, and that it can do so and lose no regard for the public interest."

DISASTER OF 1913.

"The disaster of 1913 on the Great Lakes when fifteen ships broke in two and 254 men were drowned in one storm directed attention to the faulty construction of freight boats piping these waters. A few minor changes were made in the regulations to safeguard the freight steamers.

SCORES SAVED BY HEROIC RESCUERS

CHICAGO, July 26.—Greater by hundreds would have been the number of dead but for prodigies of heroism. The heroes ranged from young girls to ragged dock rats and hoboes to professionals.

A frail mite of a girl crawled over the side of the ship at the risk of her own life, and dragged a number of children to safety. A man who was out of work and contemplating suicide, found plenty of work when the ship capsized. He plunged in and rescued nine persons before he was dragged out, almost dead.

A policeman saw a motorman stop between stations, run back along the tracks, plunged into the river and saved eight from drowning. There were numerous cases of boy heroes, in two cases boys themselves perished after helping many women and children to safety.

One boy, whose identity is yet a mystery, jumped from the dock into the river to help two women hanging to some object in the middle of the stream. He was swimming to the dock with one of the women, when the other flung her arms around his neck and all three drowned.

WOMEN WERE STRONGER.

Morris Jorgensen, a professional diver, who had brought out thirty bodies and was sitting on the dock, dazed and hysterical, was clubbed into insensibility by policemen because he could not comprehend the order to "move on."

William Raphael, manager of a commission house, leaped into the river and was swimming to the dock with two women, when a fat man, his face a livid green from fear, clutched the dress of one of the women. Raphael kicked him in the face, but in the struggle the fat man and one woman drowned.

All witnesses agree that in the crisis women were stronger and more self-possessed than men, and more ready for their lives, the women recovered. They clung patiently to bits of wreckage and delivered thousands of rescuers. Those trapped in the hull were calmly waiting for rescuers. The men, however, chiefly young foreigners, dragged women from places of safety, and even after their own safety was assured, stood around stolidly without offering to assist.

Fred Swigert, a city fireman, worked three hours lifting bodies from the hold. Then a diver passed up the body of a little girl, her dimpy dress a pitiful, clinging shroud. Swigert placed the little body on a trestle and then looking closely at the drawn features, gasped and fell unconscious across the body. It was his own daughter.

Every person living in the two-family house at No. 2301 South Keim avenue perished in the Eastland disaster. Julius Strogl and his wife, married five months; Alfred Anderson, his wife and son, seven, were the victims. B. B. Pritchard saved his wife and son by supporting them on deck chairs until rescue. You who read this letter could feel dozens of living persons churning the water under me," he said. "One woman grasped my legs, but the bodies of others pushed her away, else I should have perished."

A torn love letter was found floating on the river surface. A girl had written it, evidently it had not been mailed, or if it had, perhaps the man for whom it was intended had met her at the dock, as it seemed to beg him to, and had returned it to her.

RECOVER LOVE LETTER.

The letter was in two sides, in the shuttering chirography of a school girl, had a blue monogram that puzzled for a moment. Then it revealed the characters "L-O-V-E." It started torn diagonally from the upper centre of the page to the last corner. Its torn lines were blurred by water, but there was enough left to read:

"My Dear Mr. ——: I left for you the other—heard from you—are busy. Dearest—red tears all evening—see you at the dock—I hear it—beautiful Chicago trip—I understand he—Oh, Oh, well I could—which I care—life is hell—going to meet boat saturday—"

"THE GODDESS"

By GOUVERNEUR MORRIS and CHARLES W. GODDARD

By Gouverneur Morris and Charles W. Goddard

Copyright, 1916, by the Star Company.

PRESENTLY Celestia's breathing sounded slow and regular.

"She's asleep," thought Mrs. Gunsdorf, "the time has come," and she began cautiously to edge herself out sideways from under the bed. But Celestia was not quite asleep and the noise Mrs. Gunsdorf made waked her, and just as Mrs. Gunsdorf was beginning to rise from the floor, Celestia slipped from the bed, eluded a hand that clutched at her dress, snatched from the bureau a heavy silver hand mirror, the only weapon of defence that was in sight, and darted into the observation compartment.

Celestia was less like a creature flying for its life than one who attempts to understand a situation with a view to mastering it, but who in the meanwhile is not going to run any risks of being accidentally hurt.

Had the other been the case, she must have fled screaming through the outer door of the observation compartment, out into the night. She did nothing of the kind.

In the centre of the place was a heavy table covered with periodicals; behind this Celestia took her stand; ready, like a child playing tag, to dodge in either direction. Her eyes, wildly excited, but fearless, strove to meet and master the eyes of her assailant, but could not so bound was Mrs. Gunsdorf by the knowledge that she must look anywhere but at those eyes.

Followed a time of stillness, tenseness and quick breathing. Then efforts by Mrs. Gunsdorf to get on the same side of the table with Celestia, and calm reasoned thwartings of these efforts by the latter.

Mrs. Gunsdorf was at a disadvantage. Not much older than Celestia, she was heavier, less alert, and she dared not make a full use of her eyes. Her face averted, so that with the tails of her eyes she only had partial glimpses of Celestia, her rushes were more or less at random.

Once she threw herself headlong half across the table and stabbed as a snake strikes—only to find that she had miscalculated the distance entirely.

There was another pause.

"Why do you want to hurt me?" asked Celestia. "Why won't you look at me?"

Mrs. Gunsdorf's only answer was another rush. Celestia threw a chair in her way and once more succeeded in keeping the heavy table between them.

She was getting angry. What right had any one to chase her with a knife? If the woman would only look at her!

Mrs. Gunsdorf, thwarted and murderous, was nonplussed at the ease with which, so far, Celestia had eluded her. Her eyes, downcast, had for their momentary range of vision a pile of reviews, just in front of Celestia, and a portion of Celestia's dress.

Quick as thought, Celestia laid the hand mirror with which she had armed herself face up upon the pile of reviews, and behold, in the depths of the shining refractor the eyes of the two women had met at last.

So great was Mrs. Gunsdorf's dread of those wonderful eyes, so greatly had the memory of what they had once done to her, worked upon and grown in her imagination, that the sudden sight of them gazing commandingly up into her own from the depths of the mirror, numbed and dazed her like a blow on the head.

With a great effort to collect her swimming senses, she jerked her her head up, and found herself looking into the eyes themselves. Catastrophe was upon her; she had no longer the power to look away.

First hatred of Celestia was wiped clean from her heart, she did not know why she had come, what she was doing in that observation car. Then the knife fell from her nerveless fingers, and she felt peacefully drowsy, and as if many heavy troubles had been lifted from her shoulders.

But Celestia, having about her something of the sternness of a just judge, picked up the knife, and put it back in Mrs. Gunsdorf's hand.

"At last," said Celestia, "you shall go away thinking that you have done what you came to do—Celestia, who has done you no harm in this world, but whom you wish to stab to death with that knife is asleep on her bed in her stateroom. She is very tired and very sound asleep; still you must move cautiously."

And Mrs. Gunsdorf, her eyes fixed and dead, but the rest of her features wearing a wicked, murderous expression, began a horrible, grotesque, tiptoed advance toward the open door of Celestia's stateroom. Then, in her hypnotized brain, she seemed to see Celestia asleep upon her bed; and then she was driving her knife many times to the hilt in the beautiful white breast.

"Once more for luck," said Celestia, with a kind of awful grimness, "make it baker's dozen. Thirteen, now she's dead. Now she can't try to help anybody any more. You're sorry now and frightened, aren't you? Well, perhaps they won't catch you. Nobody saw you come, nobody will see you go. But, of course, poor Celestia will be found murdered, and there will be a great hue and cry.

And if they find a woman hiding in the wood with a wild, haunted face and bloody hands and a bloody knife in them, they'll know just what to think. So slip into the bathroom there and get the blood off your hands and off the knife. The left hand tap is the hot water. Hurry! There is no time to lose."

So Mrs. Gunsdorf hurried and hurried and washed and washed, and Celestia stood grimly by and looked on.

"It is curious that it doesn't all come off, but then there was such a lot of it. Try the pummice stone, try that little bottle; it's for removing ink stains. I'm afraid it's no use—you'll always see those spots on the hand that held the knife. You'll really have to go now. Some one is sure to come, and you'll be caught."

She accompanied Mrs. Gunsdorf, now quaking with terror, horror and remorse, to the rear platform of the car.

Alaska the Eden Which Millions of Songsters and Game Birds Love to Visit

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

YOU have never thought of Alaska as a Summer paradise for birds, neither had I until I read the fascinating pamphlet, full of unfolding little facts, entitled "Alaskan Bird Life." There I learned that "the bird population of Alaska is not only extensive, but in more surprising relative of the rest of North America than that of any other part of the continent."

This is an astonishing statement to make about a land whose inhabitants are two-thirds of the human race and nine or ten of Winter, and but Spring at all. Where the thermometer is capable of sinking into the fifties, where the ground is frozen and freeze to a depth of nine feet. Where, although vegetation grows in a never-melting layer of frozen soil two or three yards thick. Where the ground is almost bare of trees in places, be frozen to a depth of a hundred feet. Where, in the southern portion, the sun is only visible for two hours in mid-Winter, while in the northern portion there is a continuous night for more than a month long!

But the short Summers is crowded and humming with life, whose intensity varies in inverse proportion to its brevity. And into this brief time far northern world of amazing to beautiful species and exquisitely brilliant wonders, to which it repeats Winds and delicious garden odors. Thousands of birds from the south leads to take their annual in the heights of the sub-arctic Eden.

They have a road into it that is one of the grandest natural highways on the globe. It leads down the great valley of the Yukon River, and by this route go and return many of the familiar birds of the United States. The rest of the species are not troubled by the long, cold Winters, for they fly back to more genial climes as soon as the chill begins to creep down from the Pole.

Remaining only from mid-May to mid-August, the birds have little of the endless nights, but, on the contrary, enjoy the endless days. In June the twilight is so bright at midnight that one can read fine print, but the birds, both visitors and residents, are wide awake, because just because the sky refuses to darken. By eight or nine o'clock full, except the nocturnal species are "abed" where they remain in seclusion until three o'clock in the morning. E. W. Nelson says that during the long twilight of the early Summer nights he has often wandered for hours over the shallow lands east of St. Michael watching the sleeping birds of the marshes, ponds as well as on the open lands.

Alaska not only has multitudes of Summer bird visitors, but also many natives, which remain all Winter. Where the ground is frozen to a depth of nine feet, where there is a never-melting layer of frozen soil two or three yards thick. Where the ground is almost bare of trees in places, be frozen to a depth of a hundred feet. Where, in the southern portion, the sun is only visible for two hours in mid-Winter, while in the northern portion there is a continuous night for more than a month long!

Mallard ducks Winter in some parts of Alaska. Charles Sheldon found hundreds of them in mid-Winter north of McKinley, living at a point on the Tokiat River where the swiftness of the current prevented formation of ice, and where, consequently, they could reach the bottom and feed upon dead salmon and on unhatched salmon eggs lodged there.

In Alaska many of the wading birds and ducks are boisterous in the mating season. Their songs, Mr. Nelson avers, are as musical as those of robins, but are "more commonly mirable in their handsome breeding dress, utter an extraordinary variety of sonal series of notes. They stand like beautiful statuettes on the tundra, as they give their song."

Cadum Ointment has proved a blessing to thousands who have suffered for years from disfiguring, stubborn, irritating skin troubles.

It destroys disease-producing germs, and the itching stops soon after it is applied, and the most stubborn cases are helped in a remarkably short time. Other skin troubles, such as sores, psoriasis, ulcers, ringworm, itching piles, pimples, eruptions, etc., are quickly relieved by this wonderful ointment. Mrs. Bird says: "I found

A Short Cut

The dentist who wished to start up in business for himself had found just the place he wanted. It was an old barber's shop, and above the window still appeared the legend:

"BAKERY."

The ambitious young tooth surgeon sent for a sign writer and said:

"I want you to do a job for me. Paint out that word and put 'Dentist' in its place."

The sign painter got his ladder and his brushes and his paints and lit his pipe and got ready to work. But work was what he didn't like.

So after some thought he mounted his ladder and painted out the "B," leaving only

"AKERY."

Epicurean Episodes

The Gentle Art of Dough Making

By DOROTHY DIX.

THERE is much complaint nowadays among women, because their husbands do not know how to make Dough like father used to make. Nor is this to be wondered at, because there is nothing which is more a comfort in a home as plenty of Dough.

Therefore, it is naturally a source of keen disappointment to a girl who has been brought up in a family where the head of the house was an expert Dough maker to find out that she has married a man who is totally unskilled in this useful domestic accomplishment, upon which rests so much of the peace and happiness of matrimony.

Before the introduction of golf, and country clubs, and especially before the days of the automobile for tangoing, practically every American man was a good Dough maker, and Dough making was the great natural pastime, along with their chief joy in making Dough, having it to their wives to distribute it as they saw fit among jewellers, milliners, dressmakers, etc., etc., and no one opinion of labor in the family was complete, and peace and harmony reigned in the home, and were heard the cries of divorce.

Unfortunately this happy state of affairs is changed. Even the older men seem to have lost much of their sleight of hand at Dough making, and the present generation of young men, especially city bred young men, seems to be totally ignorant of the art, and to lack the necessary energy and hustle that are required to turn out even a humble article of the staff of life.

They prefer to live upon father's Dough, or to marry a girl with enough Dough for two instead of making their own as their fathers and grandfathers did. Indeed, some of our gilded youths, especially such as have traveled abroad, turn up their noses at the ancient and honorable pursuit of their forefathers and declare that nothing would induce them to soil their hands with such menial occupation.

Poets and other men afflicted with the artistic temperament also speak contemptuously of Dough making. These seldom have any Dough, but it is to be observed that those who most despise Dough making have the least compunction in substituting therefor the manufactured by others. People who live upon the Dough made by other people are called Sponges.

Every man who is a good Dough maker has his own special recipe for doing it. These differ in detail, but the secret of all successful Dough making is work. No matter how you start it, if you'll just work it hard enough you can turn out an article of Dough that takes the prize at any Pure Food Show.

The kind of Dough which has always been our national boast has been the famous American bread, known as Self-Rising. To make this, take a poor young boy, preferably one who has been raised on a farm, or in some small hamlet, and mix him up thoroughly with a job. It doesn't make any difference what that job is. Any kind of an old job will do, for this kind of a lad amalgamates easily with work.

Then pour in a concentrated yeast made up of ambition, a grim determination to get to the top and a hungry desire for money and the good things money buys. Knead these well together and before you know it it will bubble over the top of the pan and you will have the old-fashioned Self-Raising Dough that our fathers used to make and on which so many American families have grown fat and aristocratic.

It takes time, labor and incessant watchfulness to make Dough and many men lack the industry and the patience for this, or they attempt to hasten the process by injecting a lot of water and hot air into it, thus making what is known as Aerated Dough. This, however, is not nutritious, and seldom keeps for any length of time.

The only wholesome Dough that can be recommended for daily consumption is made by using a mixture of honest brain and brawn, that is set to rise in the warmth of opportunity, worked until it is light and shortened by plenty of elbow grease.

Dough that is sweetened is called cake. In the making of this American men excel, and when they get help to feed their families upon it, although its effects are most injurious, for it invariably gives the children the swelled head and the wife hardening of the heart, complicated with social aspirations and symptoms of nervous prostration, carries her off to Europe or fashionable health resorts for several months of the year.

To make cake Dough American family style, take a large amount of Dough, the more the better, add to this a hard of lavish devotion, mixed in equal parts with loyalty and pride, and flavored with a desire to give one's wife and children all the good things in the world.

Work this mixture through Winters colds and Summer's ennui until you are ready to drop with exhaustion, and then bake it brown by long hours in store or office, and serve up either at the family table, or send by express to the wife and children where they are enjoying themselves away from home.

The making of this usually results in the funeral of the husband and father, but the family can still make away with a few slices and remains of the Dough.

Occasionally, when the wife and children are particularly unappreciative of the cake that is served to them, they throw it to the chickens and lets the Dough sour, or else he turns to making Dough for some other woman with a sweeter tooth, but this does not happen as often as might be expected.

Probably the most expert professional Dough makers in this country are to be found on Wall Street. Here the Dough makers sometimes have mimic battles in which they throw Dough at each other, but this is very naughty conduct, and is sternly discouraged by the General of Washington, who is always belaboring them with a big stick.

All wives should encourage their husbands in Dough making. It keeps them out of mischief, and promotes domestic felicity.

It Stuttered.

Mr. Brown bought a parrot. He was told it was a good talker, and would soon learn to repeat anything spoken in its presence. A fortnight later, however, he brought it back to the shop.

"What's the matter with it?" asked the dealer.

"W-w-why," said Mr. Brown, "the s-s-s-silly c-c-creature s-s-st-stutters!"

Parents and the Child

The Folly of Teaching Baby Talk

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

Copyright, 1916, by Star Company.

HOW our children shall speak is worth consideration. I do not mean how they shall learn to from the first baby words that mean so much to the devoted parents. But shall they speak like educated and refined members of society, or shall we allow them to indulge in the slang and rough-and-tumble language peculiar to some of their associates?

Children are as imitative as monkeys. One man who, in intense moments, lapses into profanity, has a bright little daughter of two and a half years. The parents did not suppose that the tiny creature was old enough to notice any peculiarities in her father's speech. One day, when he was giving the child a ride on his foot, she looked up at him with an ecstatic smile.

"My God, what a good time we're having!" she lisped.

The father sat her down and started to his feet.

"Where did that child ever pick up such an expression?" he exclaimed. "I won't have my baby talk profanity!"

"Then you must not use it in her presence," the mother rejoined tersely.

It is certain that children have an aptitude for learning the things we would not have them learn. The vulgar word heard on the street, the rough expletive uttered by a playmate, is repeated with a parrot-like accuracy that makes even the unorthodox almost believe in natural depravity.

One nurse bewailed the fact that her charge would not learn a prayer she had tried for weeks to teach him, yet learned at the second hearing a coarse song sung in his presence by a small street urchin.

Such being the case, it behooves us parents to guard our speech. Not that we are prone to profanity or vulgarity, but we do use many more than we realize. The man who says to his small son, "Can that racket!" instead of "Stop that noise" need not be surprised if the lad finds such expressions more natural than he does English undefiled.

We cannot keep our children from the use of some of the phrases common among their playmates and schoolfellows, but we can try to have them hear enough good English in their homes to make them familiar with correct speech. This will, to some extent, "dilute" the less refined language.

Even babies may be taught the right instead of the wrong thing. One wonders, therefore, why so many parents talk to their children in an idiotic prattle that is an insult to the intellect of average intelligence.

"And how was 'oo dis morning, my tootsie-wootsie?" coos the loving mother as she kisses her baby.

"She's mommoo's pretty sing, ain't she?"

Does such senseless patois denote superior quality of affection? It certainly does not indicate a high grade of intellect; one might say just as tender things in sane and grammatical phraseology. I know one woman who to this day perpetuates the phrases of her baby mother to such an extent that she always greets her intimate friends with "How is 'oo?"

We all know that what's funny in the kitten isn't funny in the cat. But was such talk as that ever made even in the most diminutive kitten?

I would not suggest that the child be corrected in his own sweet baby-prattle. If he is so young that he says "goggie" instead of "dogie," let him say it. As he learns to form his words more correctly he will lose the baby phraseology all too soon for our liking.

One little girl never learned to say "fish" until she was eight years old, but always spoke of "fis," and her parents smiled affectionately at the error and let it pass. That was wise. But why teach a child to say "geegee" instead of "horse," or "choo-choo" instead of "car," or tell him he may have a ride in the "honk-honk" instead of an "automobile"?

Surely even childish lips can say "auto" as easily as "honk-honk"!

While we are on this subject of correct speech for the child, and the example that may be set him in the proper use of his mother tongue, may I be permitted to repeat that which I have told elsewhere of a mother who, unconscious of her own faults of phraseology, wished her husband to correct his son's frequent use of slang.

"My dear," she said, "it's the limit the way Jack reels off slang. It's up to you to make him cut it out!"

In any further comment necessary?

(All parents should read these stories. They are not only interesting but highly instructive.)

Up-to-Date Jokes

A new safe would not open, and business in the factory was handicapped. At last in despair the mill owner sent an urgent wire to New York and a mechanic travelled down at once.

He tested the lock, examined the key and then, with a quiet smile, flashed some dirt out of the key with a piece of wire.

"What's the charge?" asked the mill owner, with a sheepish look.

"Twenty-five dollars," replied the mechanic calmly.

"Does anyone know you're in the town?"

"No one except yourself, sir."

"Then here's an extra $25. Get back to New York at once. If anyone in the town knew I'd paid you $25 to clean out a key for me, I'd never do another dollar's worth of business here."

A Canadian named Casey was appointed to a government place. Technically it had to be held by a lawyer, which Casey was not. The Casey got his knowledge of the law and, to the best of his information and belief, he had answered the questions that he had put to him correctly." The aspirant" was therefore admitted.

A ROXBURY LADY LOST 28 POUNDS

Mrs. Margaret McLaughlin of 66 Hampshire Street, Relates Experience.

The condition of the result of the modern method of living causes many people to seek relief by going into retirement for a few days or weeks, but the big majority cannot do this. They are forced by their environment to continue their daily occupation, suffering untold torture until their aches and ills assume such serious tendencies they are forced to give up. Plant Juice, the new herbal stomach remedy, is designed for just such needs. It has relieved many men and women of American cities than any other discovery of the twentieth century. It is no longer necessary for debilitated people to go to the country to get a return of the vitality of nature, as these bottles. Such is supplied directly and effectually in Plant Juice. It contains the medicinal, health and life-giving herbs, forest, field and plain—the vitalizing juices that are in the trees, shrubs and Nature's own remedy to man. Every day more and more people are coming to realize the truth of these statements as verified by testimonials of local people.

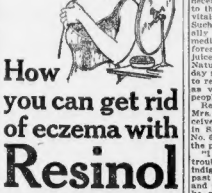
Recently the signed testimonial of Mrs. Margaret McLaughlin was received. Mrs. McLaughlin was born in Salem, Mass., and has resided at No. 66 Hampshire street, Roxbury, for the past 25 years. She said:

"I was relieved from stomach trouble which took the form of acute indigestion and dyspepsia for the past 20 years. My food fermented, and formed gas, and there seemed to be a hard lump in the pit of my stomach. I was very dizzy and had bad headaches. I was told at the hospital that I suffered from the most aggravated form of acute indigestion. I had no appetite, and had lost 25 pounds in weight. I have used your medicine for the past two weeks, and now I can eat any kind of food; have no aches or pains, sleep fine and have a fine appetite. Plant Juice has cured me all right, and I am recommending it to all of my friends."

The Plant Juice man is at the Liggett Drug Store, corner of Washington and Avon streets, where he daily meets the Boston public and introduces and explains the merits of this remedy.—Advertisement.



How you can get rid of eczema with Resinol

AGED WOMAN IS BADLY HURT BY AUTO

Mrs. Daniel Lyons, sixty-seven, of No. 925 High street, Dedham, while crossing Williams street, Dedham, today was knocked down and run over by an automobile owned and operated by Jesse Gould of Chelsea, retired Boston insurance man. Mrs. Lyons was seriously hurt.

According to the police, Gould, who is sixty-five, saw Mrs. Lyons in the street and sounded his horn. He turned his car to the left and, it is claimed, the woman ran in front of the machine.

Mrs. Lyons suffered severe scalp wounds and her shoulder and left side were injured. She was removed to her home, where three physicians treated her. Rev. John Smith of Medfield, who happened to be passing on a street car, ran to assist Mrs. Lyons.

Roosevelt Hits "Poltroonism" of Pacificists

SAN FRANCISCO, July 26.—Theodore Roosevelt, addressing men attending the student instruction camp at the Presidio, denounced the "Collegiate and Anti-Militaristic League" as preaching a doctrine of "cowardice and emasculated morality." He had a letter from members of the league.

"I find on this letter," Colonel Roosevelt said, "the signatures of eight men, presumably Americans, and one Chinaman, and this is right and proper, for it is an appropriate thing for the eight who are trying to Chinafy the United States to associate themselves with a Chinaman in this country.

"It is merely another of these peace-at-any-price efforts—efforts that prove that if the pacifists are not all poltroons, they teach poltroonism, and if they had their own way would breed a nation of poltroons.

HITCH AROUSES UNION MEN IN BRIDGEPORT

By International News Service.

BRIDGEPORT, Ct., July 26.—The labor situation, supposedly settled Saturday by the ratification of the union striking machinists of supposed agreements made between the labor leaders and the Remington-U. M. C., was reopened today by the refusal of the Remington company to take back some of the strikers. The labor leaders retaliated by refusing to let the strikers return in the sub-contracting plants.

J. J. Keppler, vice-president of the International Association of Machinists, says the machinists who were ordered back to work today in the Remington and the Union Metallic Cartridge plants were refused work.

Mr. Keppler said the agreement with the concern was made last Thursday, but not signed. He believes the Remington people are willing to make good, but that the trouble now lies with the superintendents.

"If the men will not be taken back that means a calling out of the men engaged in the construction of the new buildings. We have the carpenters with us now, as they are a part of the agreement completed Saturday. After that the strike will be general," said Mr. Keppler.

Striking machinists in the Coulter & McKenzie Company, Bridgeport Engineering Company and Gaynor Manufacturing Company also refused to return to work as a body, as they had not received the eight-hour day. The other firms are sub-contractors of the Remington company. A few returned as individuals.

A demand will be made on the Locomobile company for the eight-hour day. This company is turning out seventy-five trucks a week for the Russian government.

PASTOR PETERS GIVES WARNING TO CHURCHES

"Boston temperance people must make other places as attractive as the saloon, if they are going to put the saloon out of business," asserts the Reverend Dr. Madison C. Peters of New York, who is occupying the pulpit of the Clarendon Street Baptist Church during the Summer.

Dr. Peters is giving considerable time, while in Boston, to the study of social questions. He likes to see the open way maintained by the saloons here. There is too much cover in the New York saloons, according to him.

"I have watched the average man here in Boston during these warm evenings," he declares. "What is he to do? He can go into a rescue mission and be converted, if he is so inclined, but there are hundreds of others who cannot have the primary idea of being converted.

Jesse Pomeroy Heart Broken, Seriously Ill

Jesse Pomeroy, whom thirty-eight years of solitary confinement failed to affect physically, is reported to be seriously ill, broken down by the loss of his best and almost his only friend, the little mother who died a few months ago without accomplishing her self-appointed life task—securing his pardon.

He has been missing from his daily walks in the prison yard, the last privilege secured by his mother, and has been complaining of suffering caused him by the hot weather. He is still in his big cell in Cherry Hill, although constantly attended by Dr. Daniel J. Hurley, the old Gerard football star, and Dr. Joseph I. McLaughlin, both prison physicians.

METAL WORKERS WILL SUPPORT MACHINISTS

The support of the Metal Trades Council of Boston has been voted to the machinists' union in their fight to secure a standard minimum wage of 50cents a day and a uniform eight-hour day.

If a machinists' strike is called in Boston, this action of the metal workers would compel all shops to shut down, as the sympathy of the firemen and engineers, in leaving their posts, would shut off all power. Such action would precipitate one of the biggest and most general strikes ever called in the city.

The employes in the mechanical department of the Boston and Maine Railroad will today take a strike vote.

ALL WESTON IN SEARCH FOR DEATH CAR

Chief of Police of Weston Patrick J. McAuliffe today issued a request to every citizen of the town, to do everything in his power to assist in the hunt for the deathcar which ran down and killed little Mollis Travers, the three-year-old son of Henry Travers of Weston street.

Evidence has been submitted to the chief describing a speeding automobile with two occupants both bareheaded and he believes he is narrowing the chase to three or four cars which were in the vicinity at about the time the boy was killed.

As a mark of the sympathy of the entire town Newton street in the vicinity of the fatal spot was closed to all traffic during the funeral ceremonies yesterday.

BOOM FOR FORE RIVER IN NEW STEEL RING

Fore River is fated to become the shipbuilding centre of the Atlantic coast if the new billion-dollar steel combination projected by Henry Clay Frick and Charles M. Schwab, to compete with the United States Steel Corporation for a share in the immense profits forecast by the hoped-for activity in ship building, munitions manufacturing and the creation of a United States navy and reserve army is accomplished.

According to Cleveland dispatches the Bethlehem Steel, the Colorado Iron and Fuel, the Jones & Laughlin, the Crucible Steel, the Susquehanna Steel, and the Youngstown Sheet & Tube companies, are among the independent companies to combine.

It's Grand-Dad Fitz Now and He Sure Is Proud

Ex-Mayor, ex-Senator, ex-Councilman John Francis Fitzgerald, LL. D., is the possessor of a new title today. "Grandpa" Fitzgerald and he says he is prouder of this most recent degree than of all the others put together.

It was Mrs. Joseph Patrick Kennedy, the rose Fitzgerald of the days of the reign of John Francis I, and her lanky ten-pound boy, who confessed the newest degree bandle on "Doctor Fitz."

But in spite of the convenience of the new title, in spite of its intimacy, it might be better not to greet the "Doctor" with it too suddenly and too often, because he is still cagey about vacation Cushing's disinterested claim to all the youthfulness in politics.

And— Oh! Yes, the grandfather is doing nicely, thank you!

ELAINE, IN DISGUISE, PLANS TO FOIL WIRELESS DETECTIVE

THE incidents in the new showing of the fascinating adventures of Elaine Dodge, the many adventured beauty and heiress, are gathered under the appropriate title "The Wireless Detective."

Professor Arnold, the clever and mysterious friend of Lieutenant Woodward, who is visiting that officer at the fort, has invented a sensitive instrument that gathers information from the disturbances in the air, a kind of mental synaptic.

Elaine, despite her hazardous experience on board the old sloop in the last pictures, cannot restrain her inclination for further adventure, although she attributes it to the deeper motive of a desire to solve a mystery.

Seeing some strange looking men skulking about the woods, and her woman's intuition telling her that the presence of these curious looking men had something to do with her missing betrothed's valuable war invention, the professor, as so greatly desired by rival powers, she slips into men's apparel to dog their footsteps without attracting their attention.

Filley, Harvard Oar, Is British Aviator Hero

LONDON, July 26.—Stroke of the Harvard crew ten years ago, Lieutenant Dwight Filley of the Royal Flying Corps has been awarded the military cross for conspicuous gallantry on July 6, while taking observations for the British artillery.

According to the official report, Lieutenant Filley and an observer, although not in a special fighting machine, twice attacked and drove off German aeroplanes and continued his work of observation until two enemy machines came up. Filley attacked both aeroplanes with his remaining five rounds of ammunition and retired, only after his observer had been killed and the engine was damaged.

ARREST GUARDS IN BAYONNE ON RIOT CHARGE

BAYONNE, N. J., July 26.—Sheriff Kinkhead has arrested Samuel H. Edwards, general superintendent, and thirty-two armed guards of the Tidewater Oil Company's plant here, on charges of inciting to riot.

Edwards was released on $500 bail. The guards were jailed in default of a similar amount.

The arrests followed charges that the guards were firing on houses near the plant. People living near the works reported that bullets had broken windows in their homes. Father Sigmund Swider, pastor of a Catholic Church, reported that a bullet struck the outside of his rectory. The church is about half a mile from the strike zone.

10,000 ITALIANS RAID GERMAN GATHERING

PHILADELPHIA, July 26.—Four men arrested when a mob of 10,000 Italians stormed an Austro-German meeting here were to be arraigned in court today.

The mob stormed a hall at Eighth and Christian street, broke up the meeting and savagely attacked several of the speakers.

Stones and clubs whizzed thick and fast before the police—Lieutenant Noon of the Second and Christian streets station sent in a riot call that brought 150 officers to the spot—jumped into the melee. It took half an hour before quiet again prevailed. Scores were badly bruised about head and face.

The Italians say that Carlo Tresca, and other I. W. W. leaders and Socialists have been preaching that Italy did wrong to enter the European conflict, and asking Italians to stay at home.

STARS TO MEET IN LONGWOOD TOURNEY

A field of eighty-eight crack tennis players from all parts of the country are gathered in Boston for the Longwood singles tennis tournament for the famous Longwood bowl. Maurice McLoughlin, fresh from his victories on the Pacific coast, including the Panama Pacific exposition event in which he defeated W. M. Johnston in the final is the title holder and will come East to defend his right to it. McLoughlin will meet the player who succeeds in going through the event this year, and, should he be successful, the valued trophy will be his. Three wins are necessary for a permanent possessorship and McLoughlin, with a triumph in 1913 and another last Summer, is in line to win the cup outright.

Champions of local and national repute are to be found in the field, and the tournament promises much in the way of exciting tennis, both in the singles and doubles events.

The list of entrants and the pairings for the first and second round do not bring any of the top notchers together, but there are enough close contests slated for these rounds to provide spicy entertainment for all tennis lovers.

McLOUGHLIN AT HIS BEST.

Last year McLoughlin had to defeat Bundy, Niles and Williams, in addition to Johnston, and a much harder list of opponents would be hard to find.

The world's champion grass court player is said to be in great playing form, the tournaments he played in California having speeded up his game. His back hand is said to be surer than it was and he has given a lot of attention to playing the ground strokes, a department of the game where he has always been weakest.

McLoughlin will be at Longwood Wednesday. The matches in the singles will start today at 10 a. m. and, as the draw is a pretty even one, none of the stars will meet until the competition is beyond the second round.

A pretty good first round match ought to come between Craig Biddle and H. H. Dana. The former has been playing a lot of rattling good tennis and his tournament experience abroad has rounded out his game to a marked degree.

Another match that looks like a good one is the Beekman-Emerson contest. The first named is a young player with a lot of fine strokes and bears watching. Emerson has won a lot of tournaments in the Middle West from whence he comes. F. J. Sulloway and G. C. Caner will unquestionably provide a scrappy match.

DOUBLES SLATED FOR TUESDAY.

The Eastern doubles championship will be played tomorrow forenoon and the tournament will see some new combinations, notably G. P. Gardner, Jr., and W. C. Nicoll and R. N. Fell and H. H. Hackett.

Nicoll and Beare won the tournament last year. Hackett is a former national champion in the doubles. R. N. Williams 2d, and W. M. Washburn; I. C. Wright and Wallace F. Johnson of Philadelphia; Harry Johnson and Craig Biddle and R. C. Seaver and F. J. Sulloway are other strong teams.

Athletes Off to Frisco.

"Bill" Means, the B. A. A. hurdler, who recently transferred from Colby to Harvard, and Joe Higgins of Holy Cross, the crack quarter-miler, left for San Francisco today to compete at the big games at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

New Park Ready on Return of Braves

When the Braves hit the road tonight they will be gone until Wednesday, August 18, and when they return they will play at their new yard. President Gaffney announces that work is being rushed and the park will be ready for occupancy a good week before Manager Stallings gets back with his players.

After winding up in the West, the Braves will clash in a most important series in Philadelphia, August 13, 14 and 16. The St. Louis Cardinals will be their opponents when the club dedicates its new home.

$10,000 Prizes at Rockingham Racing Meeting

Rockingham Fair, which opens September 28 and concludes October 1, will make horse racing one of the big features of its fair. Light harness and thoroughbred runners will divide the honors. Secretary Ralph T. Millet announces that he will hang up over $10,000 in purses for these events.

Each day there will be three harness races and three races on the flat. In the harness race department there will be six trotting races and six pacing races. There will be enough slow trots and slow paces to accommodate everybody.

Fred McLaughlin, the well-known Brockton horseman, has been engaged by Secretary Millet as superintendent of the track. This will be welcome news to the horsemen, with whom he is very popular, and who regard him as an excellent track manager.

"THE RABBITS' COLUMN" By Walter J. Maranville SHORTSTOP OF THE BRAVES

Lee Meadows' success as a major league pitcher, despite his apparent handicap of being forced to wear glasses, has caused the St. Louise (Federal League) club to hire a bespectacled hurler. Frank Ellerman of the Mount Vernon, Ill., club, who recently fanned nineteen men in a nine-inning game, is Jones' newest recruit.

Ellerman is near-sighted without his "specs," and therefore wears them on the hill.

There is only one out-and-out, reliable hit-and-run batter in the American League," says Hugh Jennings, "and he is Eddie Foster of the Washington club." That is why Jennings does not believe in the waste ball as a good defence. "Two of the best catchers who ever lived," continued the director-general of the Tigers, "were 'Duke' Farrell and Wilbert Robinson. Seldom did either call for a pitch out except when Willie Keeler was at the bat, for he could hit to any field. My opinion is that the waste ball should be called for rarely."

"Bill Bernhard, former major leaguer and now an umpire in the Southern Association, is a sincere and true friend of Napoleon Lajoie, and in talking of the trouble of Lajoie with Joe Birmingham, Bernhard has this to say:

"I don't know anything of the Frenchman's troubles with Birmingham and don't care to know, but I want to say that Lajoie is a square man and a good friend.

"A few years ago at Nashville a bank failed, and the story got around that I lost all my money by this failure. A few days later I received a letter from him containing a check for $500, which was tendered as a loan until I recovered from my supposed financial difficulties. I immediately sent back the check to the Frenchman with thanks and informed him that I wasn't broke by any means. But I vote this incident and ask the question: Does any one know of another ball player that would have done this for a comrade?"

It couldn't have happened in the big leagues, but it was a big league exhibition of head work. The bases were full. The batter lifted a high fly over the left fielder, who was playing just inside the sidewalk. His pursuit of the ball took him into the street. After a sharp run he got under the ball. Just as it was descending into his glove the batter stopped and shouted:

"Look out fer de ottymobile!"

The fielder dodged an imaginary automobile, the ball fell safe and three runners crossed the plate.

A precedent was set the other afternoon when the president of the Federal League, James A. Gilmore, yanked a catcher off the field and suspended him. Catcher Allen became involved in an altercation with a spectator in the grand stand, and during the game and after some unpleasant remarks were exchanged.

When Tom Seaton looks the situation squarely in the face, figuratively speaking, and reads the stories about the wonderful doings of Grover Cleveland Alexander, the former Quaker mail fed like going back to row punching. In 1913 Seaton and Alexander kept step with each other for many weeks. They were a wonderful pair of twirlers. Both were willing workers. Both were always in condition. In two years Seaton, thanks to careful coaching, had been developed into a wonder.

Then along came the Federals. The Phillies offered Tom terms, and Tom came back with a counter proposition, which President Baker accepted. Next Season went over to the Federals. The Philadelphia club thought it had a good case against Seaton, but investigation proved otherwise. It was found that Seaton did not actually sign the telegram which was sent out giving his terms. He phoned the message to a telegraph office instead of actually signing it himself. So there was no fight to get Seaton back.

Tom made a good bargain for himself with the Federals. He got a two-year contract at a big salary, and he had put in the contract that when the Brooklyn Federals were on the road, whether in training or during the championship season, the club should furnish him with a suite of rooms and pay his wife's expenses.

BRAVES BEAT IT AFTER BATTLE WITH CUBS

The Braves get through their current stand at Fenway Park this afternoon. The longed-up club has been operating in first place when they opened in the East July 8, being thirty-five points ahead of the Phillies, second in line, are now a very tame third, and if Our Boys thrash 'em again today the clan of Bresnahan will be down at the .500 notch, and only some fifteen points removed from the seventh hole.

Ragan or Hughes will be sent against the Cubs. It looks like four straight, which coming on top of the decisive wallopings of the Pirates and Reds proves vehemently the Braves are traveling at top speed.

It looks like Larry Cheney on the hillock for the Cubs. Going badly at the start of the campaign, the big right-hander has lately pulled himself together and right now is going as speedily as of yore. In his last out he brought Grover Alexander's brilliant winning streak to a close by flaying the King, 4 to 3.

Tomorrow the Braves show in Brooklyn and Wednesday open their second Western tour in that dear Cincinnati.

NEWS WRITTEN BY LEADING EXPERTS

SAYLOR FANCIED IN GO WITH AZEVEDO

By JACK CONWAY.

MILBURN "YOUNG" SAYLOR, who would probably be able to knock out "Battling Kid" Quigley of the National League in about ten seconds, is in our fair city today. He is not here trying to get a match with the honorable battling person who presides out at Fenway Park. He probably fears that Quigley would call upon John K. Tener for aid if the going became too strenuous. Far be it from a peace-loving young bitzen like Saylor to get into a controversy with the world's greatest kalsomine expert and champion of incompetent umpires.

Saylor came to Boston merely to give the scenery in these parts the once over before meeting Joe Azevedo in a twelve-round boxing match at the Atlas A. A. tomorrow evening. The Indianapolis man informed us today that he plans to take a number of healthy blows at Azevedo's jaw tomorrow night. It might be well for Quigley to get a ringside seat so that he could see how a real fighter swings a haymaker.

Saylor also told us that he will not wait until Azevedo steps on one of his pet bunions before he starts hostilities. He declares he is going out for the decision from the drop of the hat and that he will not stop fighting even if "Hank" Brosnahan should enter the Atlas Club with an olive branch in one of his hands.

We bet that Harvard Heinie Zim of the Cubs would enjoy fighting on the ball field the way that Saylor and Azevedo will be allowed to battle at the triple A organization. He would then be able to prove to all that the boy with the punch usually gets the decision.

Boy even though Battling Quigley, John Kilcomins Tener and Harvard Heinie Zim are not numbered among those present, Saylor and Azevedo should put up a slashing battle. Both of these men are aggressive, two-handed fighters and neither is exchanging blows with an opponent. Therefore, something is liable to drop at the Atlas Club tomorrow night after Referee Phil Powers has given the boxers their final instructions.

Saylor has been made a favorite over the Californian. This is to be expected, as Jack Bromley's system put up a wonderful fight here with Charley White two weeks ago. The decision of Referee Billy Roche of New York was a draw, but almost every unbiased person at the ringside declared that Saylor had a big margin in his favor when the chimes sounded at the end of the final frame.

THE management of the Atlas A. A. tried to arrange for a second meeting between White and Saylor. The latter was willing to clash with the Chicago man in a return whirl, but White demanded such unreasonable terms that the local organization was forced to stop negotiating for the tussle.

Azevedo was then secured to meet Saylor. He is a boxer who performs along the same lines which won fame for Ad Wolgast and Battling Nelson. He usually finishes the fighting and is a hard puncher while he is able to assimilate considerable punishment.

AZEVEDO is not a stranger to the Atlas leaders in the lightweight class. He has a decision to his credit over Ad Wolgast, while he gave Charley White a couple of hard fights. The first bout between Azevedo and White was a ten-round affair with honors even. In the second encounter, White landed a dream smash in the eighteenth stanza. Azevedo has also fought Johnny Dundee and Joe Mandot. He gave each of these men an interesting whirl.

Miron First in Swim to Light

Henry Miron, the eighteen-year-old North Abington boy, member of the L Street Swimming Club, is today recognized as the champion long-distance swimmer of New England as a result of his victory in the annual Charlestown bridge-Boston Light swim, given under the auspices of the club which he represented. Miron and Charles Toth, also of the L Street Club, were the only ones to finish out of the field of fourteen.

Miron was in the water six hours and forty-nine minutes. Toth reached the light one hour and one minute behind the North Abington youth.

Miron's time would have been about twenty minutes faster but for the refusal of the captain of the Governor Dingley to steer a little out of the way or to slow down, making him turn around and swim back for some distance.

George Meehan of the Brookline A. C., favorite to win the race, was forced to give up his attempt when within 300 yards of the finishing point.

Little Fellows Best of England's Fighters.

Dutch Sam, a Jew, and Jack Randall, an Irishman, were the two best fighters England ever saw. Because they were "little fellows" their fame did not go far, however.

Some at that, says Willard in tomorrow's chapter of his autobiography. Dutch Sam offered to fight Cribb, the heavyweight champion, but Cribb wouldn't meet him. And there were plenty to back Sam, too.

And Randall, the Irishman, had to quit the ring because nobody would fight him.

Back to the Elementary Movements.

If you imagine that the best exercise—the Hurrah—was a windmill movement, with the wheel going round in one direction, one wheel on your right side, one on your left, all you need do in this next exercise is to set the two wheels going in the opposite direction.

Instead of starting by throwing the arms simultaneously upward and outward, and so back and round to the front again, begin the movement by throwing them backward, and so upward and forward, till your hands meet once more in front. If those ball-and-socket joints needed anything more to unlimber them, this exercise will supply it. Keep going at full speed for twenty revolutions, and then let a pause to take stock of your tendons.

And since we have a little space at our disposal, let me say that these exercises are in the elemental category. They are not fascinating in themselves, but their effect is to enable you to do, without injury, things which are fascinating and important; if you were to attempt these others without having first qualified yourself by diligent practice of the humble introductory movements, you would risk injury, and might seriously cripple yourself. The wonderful instrument of which we call the human body must be trained and seasoned before it can demonstrate its capabilities. What the limit of those capabilities is, we are still learning. Up to a few days ago, the limit of speed in running the mile was thought to have been reached, long ago, by George of England. Then came forth a young graduate of Brown University, and surpassed it, and was so far from being exhausted by that tremendous feat, that he wanted to try for the half-mile record that same afternoon.

No one who has not tried it has any conception of what it is to run a mile at the top of his speed. What, then, must it be to run a faster mile than has ever been run before? This is an old world, and runners having been rivalling each other for many thousands of years; and yet it was only last week that the time of four minutes twelve and three-fifths seconds was accomplished.

I know little of the previous athletic career of the hero of that achievement, but it is certain that not only his natural aptitude for running must have been extraordinary, but his preparation must have been long, intelligent and careful. An ordinary athlete can train a few weeks and do the hundred yards in eleven seconds or under; but the mile is a very different matter. To run the mile in good time—below four-thirty, say—will tax every ounce of power in a man's body, and test his courage and endurance to the last notch. And if his physical strength and the condition of his heart and lungs be such as to enable him to do it without exhaustion or injury, he is an athlete of the first rank.

But to get in that class, or even to approximate to it, you must begin at the bottom, and thoroughly toughen and try out every muscle in your body; and insure your vital organs to undergo with impunity every exertion. So now we will go back to our elementary movements, and with patience, conscience, and attention, we shall be doing something worth while by and by.

Joe Wood in Town; Also Three Mates

Joe Wood, George Foster and Ernie Shore, the three Red Sox pitchers, arrived in Boston from St. Louis today. The trio won together from the Bowlands in Chicago and it is evidently Manager Carrigan's intention to work them in the three-game series with the White Sox at Fenway Park starting tomorrow.

Harold Janvrin, the Red Sox' crack young utility infielder, reached the city Saturday. He was slightly spiked by Jacques Fournier of the White Sox in the Chicago series, and now that Everett Scott is back in trim and in the game, Manager Carrigan allowed Childs Harold to come home in advance of the club so as to get the rest he has so richly deserved.

SOX ON WAY TO BOSTON SURE OF FLAG

ST. LOUIS, July 26.—The Red Sox were a happy lot of athletes when they swung aboard their special Pullman, billed straight through to Boston, last evening, arriving at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning. Opening in the West July 9, standing second in the race, they're off for home the undisputed holders of first place.

When the tour started the Red Sox were two points behind the White Sox. Now they are fifteen points ahead of the Rowland outfit and it is only because the Speed Boys ran across some unexpected trouble here yesterday that the margin is not far healthier.

After making it four straight over Rickey's Rogues, the Red Sox got careless. They evidently had it figured where they could whip the Brownies without exerting themselves. In defeat came in the closing encounter Saturday, while yesterday the first battle went against the Red Sox, 9 to 8, while the blow-off ended with honors even-steven, 1 to 1, play being called at the end of the ninth canto owing to darkness.

Winning thirteen of their twenty games on the trip and moving into first place is the proud record of the Red Sox. So it is not to be marveled at that the players were feeling frisky when they hit out for home last evening.

The White Sox are also eastward bound today; in fact, "Pants" Rowland is due to strike Boston with his family in the evening. The two clans are to scrap at Fenway Park tomorrow, Wednesday and Thursday.

"We will win the odd game, if not all three," stated Carrigan before getting aboard the rattler last night. "Rowland's club is a good one, but mine is its complete superior, as was proven in Chicago. I think we put the White Sox out of the race for all time when we thrashed 'em four out of five.

"Wood, Foster and Shore are already at home, resting up for the Chicago series, and I'm confident at least two decisions will come our way. Yes, Jack Barry is sound again. So is Scott. We are set to clinch the flag before we leave Boston again."

Providence "Fan" Seeks World's Series Trip

FRANK H. RONK

The "fans" are signing up rapidly for the AMERICANS big baseball contest.

If you cannot complete yourself, phone to the AMERICAN and help a friend along. The free trips to the World's Series Championship games are all arranged, for twenty-five regular "fans" are going to win and have the time of their lives. One of the "fans" might just as well be you.

There's no subscription plan attached to the competition.

The way to get in line for one of the free trips is to save the coupons appearing in the Daily and Sunday AMERICAN—and START NOW.

If you were not among the leading twenty-five in yesterday's vote standing, do not be discouraged, but line up all your friends and do your best to "get there" in next Sunday's vote list. To do this means activity—and lots of it—If you want one of the free Championship Series Trips.

The Contest Editor wants a good photograph of each candidate. These pictures will be published in the AMERICAN from time to time. It is not promised that each picture will be printed, but as many will be used as space will allow.

Pile up the votes, "fans," for the Sunday, August 1st, list.

The friends of Frank H. Monk, of No. 23 Osborn street, Providence, R. I., are working night and day securing the all-important vote coupons which will send THEIR candidate to the 1913 World's Series Games.

Chance for Soccer Teams to Enter

Soccer teams who have not yet entered for the five-a-side competition at the Caledonian Club's games on August 1 were allowed two more days grace at a meeting of the games committee at Caledonian Grove. There is no limit to teams entered, and the added time was granted in the hope of securing a still greater number of teams. Entries will close Tuesday evening.

Soccer clubs are showing considerable interest in the series, and the Caledonian Club is preparing for a large crowd at the grove. Instead of medals for the winners, as in previous years the prizes will be individual silver cups to the winners and runners-up.

CARMAN PICKED TO WIN BIG BIKE TITLE

Clarence Carman, the American middle-distance bike champion, will be called upon to defend his title in a 50-mile motor-paced race at the Revere Cycle Track Wednesday night.

After a careful survey of the season's racing to date, the following men were chosen to oppose Carman: George Wiley of Syracuse, N. Y., Elmer Collins of Lynn and Bobby Walthour of Atlanta, Ga. As no foreign rider is allowed to compete for the national title, this field represents the best of the American pace followers.

No champion was ever so anxious for the call of a title as is Carman. Although he rightfully won the championship, the Jamaica cyclone was robbed of the real fruits of victory by a protest from Walthour, who claimed that he and not Carman won the big race.

The officials ignored Walthour's protest, as it was out of the question, but nevertheless it had its effect on the crowd, many of whom sympathized with Walthour and looked upon Carman as a "duke" champion. That is why Carman is anxious to prove once again that he rightfully deserves the honors which he now holds.

Carman is riding in grand shape just now and it's going to take remarkable speed to beat him. His exhibition of last Wednesday night overshadowed anything ever seen at the Revere track.

Close followers of the bike game are of the opinion that Wiley is the man he will have to beat for the title. Wiley has won his last two starts at Revere, the last one under the stiffest kind of competition. He was forced to establish a new record and already showed that he had the stuff to do it.

Smith Leads Braves at Bat.

"Red" Smith, .359, is the high Brave in sticking. For the regulars, Connolly, .256, is the leader. Next follow "Jake" Daubert, the Dodgers' first-baseman, and Cincinnati Leaguers. His notch is .329, followed by Giants Doyle and Merkle, with .324 each.

Tidy Victory for Goullet.

NEWARK, N. J., July 26.—Alfred Goullet won first honors in the big race at the Velodrome, finishing two lengths in the van of Caesar Moretti, with Frank Kramer third.

Positively Last Week

THE prices of yarn and the prices of dyestuffs soaring to the sky, the holding of every yard of worsteds and woolens in my stock for another month would mean increasing its value ten to twenty-five per cent., forces me to close this sale one week from today. If you have in mind a suit of clothes for the Fall, come in, pick one or two ends, and let me make them up at a price of $8.75

Woolens will be higher, canvasses, linings and trimmings are starting to soar, labor must necessarily increase, and I can assure the man who orders a suit today, even though he does not take it for two months, of the lowest prices that he may live to see, values considered. The greatest July business in the history of Mitchell The Tailor's stores at a time when everybody is yelling, proves that Mitchell The Tailor's values are all that I have said they were.

Globe Unfinished Worsted, Black, Priestley's English Serge, Black United States Worsted Company's Serge, Blue, and hundreds of ends of suitings, sold by me for $15, $18, and $20, suit to order. $8.75

TELLS OF MONEY DEPRECIATION IN MEXICO

WASHINGTON, July 26.—When I gave the conductor on a car a 10 cent piece for my fare he handed it back and said, "That's Carranza money, and I can't take it." He thought that was depreciated money, what would he have said had I handed him some Mexican money? What would he have given me for this $20 bill or Huerta-and Daniel Wonson of Tampico at the Exhibit, as he exhibited two bills—one issued by Villa and the other by Huerta.

"It might get 45 cents for one and 15 cents for the other," he said, "public health," said Health Commissioner Goldwater. "Among the most effective arguments of the opponents of vaccination none has been more frequently made than that tetanus was conveyed through smallpox vaccine virus.

"The very elaborate and careful investigation made by Dr. Anderson indicates clearly the falsity of such views, and those who have opposed vaccination because of the supposed tetanus danger must now recede from their position."

Vaccine Freed by Expert from Lockjaw Claim

NEW YORK, July 26.—Lockjaw has never been caused by smallpox vaccine virus, according to a report of Dr. John F. Anderson, director of the United States Public Health Service.

This statement is received with satisfaction by the physicians of the health department here.

It gives national indorsement to a theory that the department has long held as the result of its own experience and deep investigation into the subject.

The conclusions reached by Dr. Anderson followed years of investigation, which confirmed him that authentic cases of tetanus developed after inoculation invariably had been due to infection of the wound after vaccination.

The report of Dr. Anderson is a gratifying one to every person who is working for public health," said Health Commissioner Goldwater. "Among the most effective arguments of the opponents of vaccination none has been more frequently made than that tetanus was conveyed through smallpox vaccine virus.

"The very elaborate and careful investigation made by Dr. Anderson indicates clearly the falsity of such views, and those who have opposed vaccination because of the supposed tetanus danger must now recede from their position."

Arms Workers Plan Fight for 8 Hours

BRIDGEPORT, Ct., July 26—After a conference of national labor leaders here, J. J. Keppler, international vice-president of the Machinists' Union, issued a statement in which the belief is expressed that "the time is now opportune to secure the eight hour day throughout New England with the least possible resistance."

The strike at the plant of the Remington Arms and Ammunition Company, which brought the labor conference, was practically ended when the machinists ratified an agreement with the company for a working schedule of forty-eight hours a week. The men return to work today and the agreement will be effective August 1.

Returns to Be Tried for Murder in 1870

COVINGTON, Ga., July 26.—Contempt attaches after forty-five years, the Rev. W. H. McCart, who to go on trial in Newton Superior Court this morning to answer for the murder of Monroe Smith, a farmer near Starrsville, was cashier in 1870, when he killed in resenting an insult to his mother, McCart has just returned here from San Rafael, Cal., having been in the West for more than forty years, a fugitive from justice under indictment here.

On his return he met Henry Horton, a former policeman, whom he knew as a boy, told him why he had returned and surrendered.

5,000 Chicago Carmen Get $300,000 Raise

CHICAGO, July 26.—The 5,000 employes of Chicago's elevated car lines will be given a wage increase of practically everything they demanded without resorting to arbitration, it was announced today by Britton I. Budd, president of the elevated system. The increase in wages affected will mean the companies about $300,000 a year, it was said. The new agreement is for two years.

Hurt by Leap from Car.

NEWARK, July 26.—Mrs. Edward Atwood was seriously injured when, frightened by the blowing out of a tire on the motor car in which she was riding, she jumped from the moving car.

FRIML OF 'HIGH JINK' FAME DIVORCED

NEW YORK, July 26.—"High Jinks" in the drawing room of a Pullman car on its way from New York to Albany on the honeymoon of Rudolf Friml's parents and to Rudolf Friml's dressing room and skate-room scenes, caused Henry F. Miller, as referee, to recommend that a decree be granted to Mrs. Friml from her composer-husband, whose royalties are said to exceed $50,000 a year.

Incidentally, Mr. Friml, who is best known to the world as the author of the music of "High Jinks," "The Firefly" and "Naughty Marietta," was ordered to pay his wife a lump sum of $15,000 in lieu of further alimony.

Named in the action was Emma Trentini, the "little devil" of comic opera, against whom Mrs. Friml has a suit pending for $100,000 for the alienation of her husband's affections.

Despite the fact the composer did not offer any evidence in his behalf he was represented before the referee by Nathan Burkan, who subjected the witnesses for Mrs. Friml to severe cross-examination.

George Blumenthal, who for several years was counsel for Miss Trentini and acted in that capacity when "The Peasant Girl" opened in Chicago, November 15 last, testified that Friml had no connection with the show which would warrant him in accompany the company on its trip, but that he did so anyway, and when Blumenthal called at the latter artiste's dressing room he found the composer and the prima donna there. The formality of knocking and found both artistes in dishabille, became terribly excited, according to witness, and began trying to explain Friml's presence.

"You see," she said, "Rudolf has a toothache and I am trying to cure it."

Then Nowack, a maid in the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth street apartments, told of Trentini's frequent visits there, on some of which, the girl testified, she would remain as long as a week. Nowack also told of Friml's visits as to what Mme. Trentini generally wore and dress at length upon both pink and blue silk pajamas.

The maid testified that Mr. Friml's clothes were also of the same hue such that she wrote to Mrs. Friml, who was then in the Adirondacks, to inform her.

An affidavit was read in which it was set forth that on one occasion in May, 1914, Friml and Miss Trentini, at the Ansonia Hotel, Blumenthal visited her and found Friml lying on the composer asked the manager if he would go to the Claridge Hotel, meet Mrs. Friml, who was waiting for him there, and entertain her until he arrived. Blumenthal went and found Friml in bed, and, when the composer did not appear, called Miss Trentini over the phone from Mrs. Friml's apartments.

"I can't come down now," he said. "Trentini has a cold and I have got to give her a mustard bath."

TODAY'S STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor

Stocks at the opening showed both gains and losses, but advances only, chiefly confined to war order issues. The majority of rails were unchanged or lower. Coppers were very quiet. In fact the activity was in the war stocks. Standard American issues had declined in London before American markets opened. The volume of trading was fair at the start in New York, but soon slackened. The Boston market had no animation. Bethlehem Steel shot up eight points to a new highest record price within a few minutes. Missouri Pacific touched a new low. U. S. Steel did not reflect statements that it is now operating close to full capacity. An over Sunday study of President Wilson's Shell note in Germany seemed to convince the average trader that its effect should be bearish instead of bullish. But regarding the solidity of stocks a local financial publication prints the opinions from New York:

Financially the bull position is a veritable Gibraltar. The capitalists behind this month's movement are not the ones who "bear the market" makers. They are heavy weight operators in the big sense, have unlimited resources behind them. Information on conditions and prospects can be relied upon. Atlantic and a letter just received from the New York:

"The Peasant Girl" opened in Chicago, November 15 last, testified that Friml had no connection with the show which would warrant him in accompany the company on its trip, but that he did so anyway, and, when Blumenthal called at the latter artiste's dressing room he found the composer and the prima donna there. WILLARD IS AGAINST ANY BEQUEATHING OF THE TITLE

By JESS WILLARD.

Copyright, 1915, by A. Herritt. All Rights Reserved.

I DON'T think that any champion has the right to name his successor. A championship isn't a thing that can be given away as a present, and by a KNOCKOUT.

Decisions shouldn't go in a championship fight. There's too much room in them for crooked work. Also too much room for a person's opinion.

That's why I say that Jack Johnson was never a real champion until he whipped Jim Jeffries in 1910. He called himself champion after defeating Tommy Burns in 1908, but there never was any ground for the claim.

To begin with, Jim Jeffries had no right to hand his title over to Marvin Hart. This came about after Jeffries laughed off with Jack Dunroe, the big Butte miner that he knocked out in two rounds. Because there was no one to go after him, the champion announced his retirement.

A year later he referred a fight between Marvin Hart and Jack Root. The big Louisville lanky and Jack Root in twelve rounds, and Jeff turned the championship over to him. Hart had been made a champion by default. Jeff had no right to give him the title.

Then the general dubbiness made the whole thing look bad. The best fight in the world couldn't make a good decision over Jack Johnson, who was then looked on as a second rater.

Also the people that he whipped were middleweights, and a man named Bill Hanrahan had knocked him out in one round.

If Jeff wanted to retire the championship he should have staged a tournament, a number of elimination contests had brought the best man to the top. Unless I'm whipped before, I mean to quit the ring in five years, and when I do the rest of the fellows will have to fight among themselves for my shoes.

Hart didn't do much with Jeff's gift. In 1906 he met Tommy Burns, a little fellow who stood head and shoulders under him. There was no knockout, but Burns got the decision by beating the life out of the plumber.

So Burns called himself the champion then, although the whole history of the ring makes it plain that a championship changes only by a clean knockout. Burns was whipped by Jack Johnson, and the latter called himself champion of the world.

While Jim Belcher was champion of England in 1803 he lost one of his eyes while playing racquets. Another time he got fined from the ring and put his title down to be champion.

The two best men left in the ring were Joe Berks and Hen Pearce, the Tunbridge Chicken. The two men met twice, and each time Pearce handed the big fighter an awful beating. At that he laid no claim to the championship until he had also whipped Spring, the Game Gully, who, by the way, won the championship of England.

When he had so proved himself, and when his challenge did not meet with any takers, the sporting writers of the day agreed that he had won his right to be called champion of England.

Jem Belcher, however, "was a good deal like Jeffries. A lot of people got after him to enter the ring with Jem Belcher though—until he thought he owed it to his country-to fight the Game Chicken.

He had been out of the ring for two years, during which time he had taken care of himself, also he had only one eye.

But he felt so sure of victory that he named 500 guineas ($2,500) as the stake for Pearce to cover.

The fight was pulled off near Doncaster, about 155 miles from London. A ring twenty feet square was put up and then inclosed in a forty-foot ring. This second barrier was to keep the crowd back from the fighters, for it was sometimes the case that the backers of a man would cut the ropes when it looked as if they would lose.

The accounts of the fight show that it was some desperate battle, although it only lasted thirty-five minutes. Belcher fought with wonderful courage, but the blind eye made him miss many times and take a good many that he ought to have let slip by.

Both men were cautious in the first round. Belcher finally got an opening and opened a cut over the Chicken's eye, but Pearce closed in, and won the fall, dropping heavily on Belcher. This fact of his greater strength sent the betting to 5 to 4 on the Chicken.

Belcher found the body, and sent in some heavy blows. They fought into a clinch and out of it. The Game Chicken got in three heavy blows without a return, and then threw his man. The third round went much the same way, ending with a heavy fall in the Chicken's favor.

It was not until the end of the fifth round that Belcher won a fall. In this round the old champion showed a lot of science, and peppered the Chicken in the body and face. In the sixth round, however, the Chicken pressed him hard and finally slammed him to the ground.

The seventh round was all Belcher's. He blocked prettily with his left, and swung his right hard to wind and face. The Chicken got Jem's head in chancery, but Belcher slugged him so hard in the wind that he had to give it up. The round ended with both men going to their seats.

In the eighth round the writers complimented Belcher upon his fighting and footwork. He had the Chicken all at sea several times, and brought the round to a close by throwing Pearce clean over the ropes. For the first time betting was even.

By the twelfth round Belcher was weak. His lack of condition was plain to be seen, and his good eye was badly swollen. But there was nothing the matter with his courage.

"Come to me, lad," he cried. "I still can see thee."

In a terrific rally Belcher was beaten to the ropes. His arms were down, and Pearce had a fair chance for a clean blow. But just as he leveled his arm, he stopped and said:

"No, Jem, I won't take advantage of thee. No, lest I hurt thy other eye."

Belcher came up slowly but to the surprise of everybody he rallied strong, and gave as good as he took. In the clinch he gave Pearce a cross buttock, and hurled him for one of the heaviest falls of the fight.

The fifteenth round nearly saw Belcher's finish. In a fierce exchange Pearce dropped him like a log. This was the first knockdown of the fight of which Pearce called it out. The old-timer, you see, did a lot of betting on the first knockdown.

In the sixteenth round, the Chicken rushed Belcher and sent him to the ropes with a volley of rights and lefts. Belcher went down, and his fall hit upon one of the stakes that held up the ropes.

He gave a groan, and said, "My rib is broken." But the old Jem heart was here, and when the next rounds he stood up and took the hammer-like blows of the Chicken. In the eighteenth round, when it was seen that he could not raise his arms, the crowd threw a sponge into the ring.

"I don't mind for myself," said Jem, "but I'm sorry for my friends who have lost on me."

The Game Chicken was well named. The same courage that made him a champion also made him a hero. Jim at his bristol he saved the life of a poor servant girl at the peril of his own. When the whole building was blazing, she came to an attic window and called for help.

The crowd simply groaned. There didn't seem a chance for her. But Pearce, the prize fighter, was in the crowd. His ring experience had taught him to think quickly and it had also taught him courage. Running into the house next door, he climbed to the roof, and ran over to the roof of the house that was on fire.

He walked the eaves until he came to a point just over the window where the servant girl was screaming. Lying flat, he crooked a leg around a chimney, and reached down his hands. The girl caught them.

It was now Pearce's job to lift her up. And he had nothing but the strength of his arms. Twice he strained, and twice she dropped back. The dead weight on his arms tired him. He began to work loose from the chimney.

A coward would never have tried the rescue. A man less brave would have dropped the girl. But Pearce gritted his teeth, made one last desperate effort, and swung the girl up to where she could climb to the eaves beside him.

It took nerve and it took strength. And you can say all you want to about boxing, but I say that the boy who has never got a good square fight, or who lacks the fighting instinct, is never a boy who will save a girl from a burning building.

Tomorrow Willard will write about two big "little men."

Seek Identity of Injured Man

The police and the Massachusetts General Hospital authorities are seeking today the identity of the man, believed to be a conductor of the New Haven road, who was struck by the running board of a Nantasket-bound express train at the Neal street station and seriously injured.

One of his legs was crushed off, and he is on the danger list at the Massachusetts General with other injuries. He carried a block of New Haven blocks and a railroad watch numbered 1637431 in the works and 104923 in the case.

Bride of Week Widowed.

SPRINGFIELD, July 26.—While coupling a dining car to a locomotive in the New Haven Railroad yards, James Beatty was crushed so that he died. He leaves a widow, to whom he was married only a week ago.

Send Your Personality
Next to a personal call, a telephone call has more personality than any other form of communication.
No letter or telegram can give the force, the shading, the delicate emphasis that a telephone call can give to what you want to say.
You'll find it's cheaper, too, (say within a radius of 50 miles) if you figure in stenographers' wages, and the cost of equipment, stationery, and postage for you and your correspondent—your letter or telegram usually requires an answer.
There will be no toll charge on a Particular Party Call if you are not connected with the person whose name you have given to the toll operator.

OUR FIRST DUTY IS TO MAINTAIN PEACE;
OUR NEXT DUTY IS TO PREPARE FOR WAR

ARBITRATION, NOT ULTIMATUM, BEST FOR EUROPEAN ISSUES

The feature of the new note to Germany which at once arrests attention is the abrupt change in the tone and style used by Secretary Lansing.

The preceding note was couched in language which was scrupulously polite and in exact accordance with recognized diplomatic usage.

The style of the latest note is not so polite.

The new Secretary of State appears to think that brusqueness and firmness are synonymous. There are others who agree with him. But such was certainly not the belief nor the practice of his ablest predecessors—of such men as Mr. Webster, Mr. Seward, Mr. Blaine, Mr. Bayard, Mr. Hay.

The diplomatic documents of those famous secretaries were all prepared with the nicest regard to polite diplomatic custom. And surely those documents did not lack power, firmness, dignity or effect.

It is to be regretted that Secretary Lansing could not have followed the usage of those greater men who preceded him.

It is quite possible to state even a declaration of undoubted rights in a form which may be justly offensive to the government to which it is addressed.

To be perfectly candid, we think that if Herr Von Jagow were to follow Secretary Lansing's example, and return an answer couched in the same brusque and imperative language, the indignation in this country would be very great.

And we think, in all soberness and earnestness—yes, and in all patriotism—that at this time, amid the manifold perplexities, distress, miseries and calamities of war-cursed Europe, that any communication to any of the European powers should be highly distinguished by that generous and polite diplomatic expression which not only does never weaken, but does always powerfully strengthen the arguments of a just and courageous people.

Our concern over the unfortunate tone adopted by Secretary Lansing arises from no concern for Germany.

It arises from a deep and anxious concern for America.

Nay, more than that, it arises from a deep and anxious concern for the welfare of the race of which Germans, Britons, Frenchmen, Russians, Italians and Americans are all alike members—that great and dominating race whose forces and vitalities are being so terribly sapped by this dreadful war.

We long for peace in distracted Europe with a great longing.

We had hoped and we still hope that in the disposition of events, the good Providence of Almighty God, this nation of ours might be the acceptable peacemaker—the just, righteous and impartial people to whose unimpeachable neutrality and undistrusted friendliness the bleeding and war-weary nations would naturally turn for kindly counsel and unselfish mediation.

We can see no reason why this country should not have occupied that position of nobly and splendidly useful isolation.

Citizens, does it not seem to you all, in these troubled times, in these times of awful distress, in this Armageddon of the nations, that we who dwell apart and in peace can well afford to deal with all our war-torn kindred peoples across the sea with a wise and nobly generous forbearance?

Is there any service to the world and to the times to come which could more ennoble American statesmanship than to maintain a peaceful stand in the middle of this turmoil and terror, and to prevent, by the utmost stretch of courtesy and forbearance, the precipitation of this country into this dreadful European war?

The fatal weakness in the position of all neutrals now is that the assumption that rights of neutrals are "fixed and immutable" is not supported by the accepted code of international law.

Neutral rights on the seas are not now determined by international law.

We, for instance, maintain that international law protects a British ship upon which American citizens are voyaging as passengers from lawful attack from a German submarine, except under rules of visit and search.

The German government maintains that the presence of American citizens upon British ships does not protect those ships from lawful attack by German submarines without any visitation and search.

Now it is perfectly clear that here arises at once a legal dispute—an international lawsuit. And unless lawsuits are determined by violence and force, they can only be settled by reference to a competent tribunal.

Naturally Germany will no more admit that the President of the United States can formulate new international law and apply it without Germany's assent, than would we Americans admit that the Kaiser can formulate new international law and apply it to us without our assent.

What constitutes internationally lawful submarine war is a matter hitherto wholly undetermined.

Mr. Wilson has formulated his views as to what constitutes lawful submarine warfare.

Germany has conceded every other point advanced and offered apologies and reparation for attacks on American ships.

But Germany does not concede Mr. Wilson's right to determine the hitherto undetermined point as to what constitutes international law governing submarine warfare.

This point Germany proposes to submit to arbitration by representatives of neutral nations and it does seem that arbitration by neutrals ought to protect sufficiently the rights of neutrals.

It is certain that no country has been more strongly committed to arbitration than this peaceful, neutral country of ours.

We Americans have steadily advocated arbitration of international differences.

We have urged other nations to join in arbitration treaties and have actually signed more than forty arbitration treaties with other nations, each of which provides that just such differences as those between the United States and Germany, shall be submitted to arbitration.

These treaties were negotiated at our instance and they were so negotiated in order to keep our nation and other nations from being involved in needless wars.

This is the civilized policy, the humanitarian policy, the characteristically American policy.

It is hard to say why we should refuse to adopt that policy in the very first case which has arisen since our government became so earnestly and firmly committed to such a policy.

Of course a note refusing to arbitrate and insisting that we are all right and another power all wrong, is practically an ultimatum.

Unhappily, this very European war with all its destruction and disaster to all the peoples engaged in it, was caused mainly by ultimatums, by the arrogant insistence of the ruler of each nation that he was altogether right and that the others were altogether wrong.

One would think that with such evidence of the unwisdom of ultimatums, the ultimatum would be more or less out of fashion and out of date.

We think that never, in all our history, has an American administration been offered a nobler opportunity for the display of real constructive world-statesmanship.

It seems to us that our government is the one government peculiarly able to suggest and to form a league of all neutral nations and an arbitration tribunal composed of representatives of all these neutral nations, to which our disputes with Germany and with Great Britain, too, might be submitted, as well as any and all matters affecting any or all other neutrals.

We could prevent in this way any extension of this war, which even now threatens to cripple so severely the Caucasian race and the high development of its civilization.

Furthermore, such a league of the neutral nations, and a board of arbitration so constituted, would be in a wonderful position to bring this war to a quick termination.

It could bring to bear not only the persuasion of a wholly impartial body, but also the direct influence of a very powerful league—a league powerful enough absolutely to compel an end of the war in case it elected to exert its power in a forceful way.

Indeed, such a league might be the beginning of a world association of nations which would compel the submission of all difficulties between nations to a world court of arbitration, and this would seem to be the only way in which war can be ended, just as the only way in private and individual disorders are ended is by the enforcement of order, by the union of all citizens in the social organization.

We believe that satisfaction for every injury to American citizens, that reparation for every insult to the American flag, and that firm and stable guarantees of all the rights of all neutrals, can be obtained by the submission to such a tribunal of all the wrongs we have sustained from Germany and Great Britain.

Of course if this nation should be precipitated into war, every man and woman of us will support the government, heart and soul.

We will pour out our money and risk our lives cheerfully and courageously.

No foreign power need dream that we Americans will not fight shoulder to shoulder against any enemy.

As against Germany, against Great Britain, against any foreign power, we are all Americans, all loyal to our flag, all behind our government.

We will all sustain the President in any extremity.

But it is no discourtesy to remind Mr. Wilson that it is pretty easy to get into war and pretty difficult to get out of it.

The rulers of Europe are now very energetically trying to dodge the responsibility for having precipitated this war.

It might not be easy to dodge the responsibility for having precipitated America into this war.

The rulers of Europe are now full of bitter regret that they engaged in this war.

So this nation, whether victorious or not, would likely regret its participation in this same dreadful war.

Instead of adding to the horrors of this war by precipitating ourselves into it, we ought to maintain such neutral and friendly impartiality as will enable us to use our influence to bring this disastrous conflict to a just arbitrament and a speedy and permanent conclusion.
